The ABC's of Tax Lien & Tax Deed Investing

If you're reading this, you're probably curious about tax liens, tax deeds, or real estate in general, and wondering how this side of investing actually works. Maybe you've heard about it in passing, or maybe you're just exploring alternatives to the usual paths. Either way, you're about to get a clearer look at a part of real estate most people never take the time to understand.

Everything in this book comes from years of experience that were spent researching counties, attending auctions, making mistakes, adjusting strategies, and navigating an investing landscape that's always changing. The lessons here weren't pulled simply from theory, they were shaped by real decisions and their respective outcomes.

This book isn't meant to turn you into an expert overnight. It's meant to give you a solid footing, to help you think more clearly about this space, and to inform your decision as to whether tax lien and tax deed investing is the right fit for you. If you're curious, patient, and willing to learn, you're in the right place!

This book is designed to be clear, focused, and practical. It avoids unnecessary volume and instead concentrates on the information that matters most in the tax lien and deed business. The compact format makes it easy to reference while traveling or attending auctions. More importantly, it's structured to guide readers step by step, helping them build a solid foundation, think critically, and move forward with confidence.

The procedures outlined in this book apply to both tax liens and tax deeds, since the research process for each is very similar. To make things easier as you go, key real estate terms are defined in the Investor's Dictionary, and contact information for more than 3,300 counties is included as a free PDF download on the companion site.

In the pages ahead, you'll learn the core principles, key concepts, and practical steps behind tax lien and tax deed investing. Each section is designed to help you understand how the process works and how to apply it with confidence. What follows is a clear, structured introduction to the ABCs of Tax Lien and Deed Investing.

We will cover the following:

- How tax lien and tax deed investing works across United States markets
- How to define an investment strategy that fits your goals and risk tolerance
- Insider secrets and strategies for researching properties
- How to identify and reduce risk in tax lien and deed investing
- State-specific strategies and why outcomes may vary by jurisdiction
- The fundamentals of tax lien and tax deed auctions
- How to evaluate and select states that align with your objectives
- How to research and purchase tax liens and deeds remotely
- How to assess tax liens least likely to be redeemed by the property owner
- Core business principles used by experienced real estate investors
- How to plan travel for auctions efficiently
- How to research counties and auction locations in advance
- How to assess local market conditions before investing
- Practical ways to reduce travel costs

- How to ensure your funds are available on auction day
- How to effectively eliminate competition
- How to acquire tax liens at wholesale prices
- How to prepare and market your properties for efficient resale
- How to invest tax-free with the use of your retirement plan

Please note: we can't possibly cover every single thing in this short book, however our intention is to give you a solid footing so you have a great starting point to continue forward in this business.

Section 2: Investing in Tax Lien Certificates

Your Mentality

We can assume you are reading through this course because you are an open-minded individual, seeking financial freedom. However, I would imagine that you have individuals in your sphere of influence that are not on the same wavelength, and are reluctant to take risks or approach discomfort with a positive outlook.

Oftentimes, these influences aren't coming from enemies or critics, but from the people closest to you: a co-worker, friend, family member, even a spouse or partner. While they might have good intentions, their outlook can still affect how you think, and this is particularly true when they hold a negative view of your endeavours.

Most of us learned a life lesson early on as kids, that we were told to be careful about who we spent time with because of the influence they might have on us. That idea doesn't stop being relevant in adulthood, in fact I would argue it actually becomes even more prominent. The reality is, the people around you shape your expectations, your confidence, and the decisions you make, far more often than you realize.

When it comes to investing, having a clear understanding of this is vital. The mindset you bring to research, risk assessment, and decision-making plays a direct role in your results. Having an awareness of your outside influences and choosing to think independently will help you stay focused, disciplined, and intentional as you move forward.

Just as a soccer player wouldn't look to a baseball player for coaching, an entrepreneur shouldn't rely on advice from people who've never been self-employed. This is why experience matters. Advice is most useful when it comes from someone who's actually walked the path you're considering taking.

When we first began researching real estate investing, we heard every reason not to pursue it: there was no money to be made, the markets were down, or what if you got stuck with a mortgage payment? If there was a concern to raise, we heard it loud and clear, and for nearly six months, we actually believed it. What we didn't consider at the time was where that advice was coming from. Much of it came from well-meaning people we trusted - lawyers, friends, relatives, and parents. However, most of them had never invested in real estate beyond the home they lived in, if they owned one at all. Their perspective wasn't wrong, it was simply shaped by a different experience.

This is why it's so important to surround yourself with individuals who are where you ultimately want to be. You are the only person responsible for your success, and no one is going to do the work for you, so it's time to make your decision.

"If you always do what you have always done, you will always get what you have always got." - Henry Ford

At the end of the day, your mindset truly matters. When we distanced ourselves from the constant negativity, things steadily began to change. Progress became easier once we were more intentional about whose opinions we allowed to shape our thinking. That didn't necessarily mean cutting people out of our lives, it just meant learning when to listen and when to set boundaries. Not every opinion holds equal weight, especially when you're considering long-term goals and decisions.

Over time, surrounding ourselves with thoughtful, supportive people made a real difference. The result wasn't something unrealistic or "too good to be true," but a sense of clarity and momentum that made the work more enjoyable, providing more sustainable outcomes.

As difficult as the road to success may seem, try to look beyond the process and focus on the rewards ahead. Challenges are a natural part of any meaningful pursuit, so don't let temporary obstacles distract you from the bigger picture. Remember that problem-solving isn't a setback, it's a necessary part of progress.

Getting Started

The most important rule in the Tax Lien & Deed Business is to know the county's rules. Throughout this course, you will see the abbreviation "RS", which is our reminder for you to perform your research pertaining to the topic being discussed. It's key to remember that every county has different rules, and you are required to know them and to follow them closely, as you will learn to use these rules to your advantage.

Example: In Harris County, Texas, payment is required immediately after a winning bid. The auction will not move on to the next property until the buyer has paid, typically with cash or a cashier's check.

This is an important detail to understand before attending the sale. We've occasionally seen situations where a bidder wins a property but doesn't have the funds ready. When that happens, the property may be put back up for sale and sometimes sells for less the second time around. Being prepared with the correct payment method ensures you don't miss the opportunity after doing all the research.

Traveling from state to state can feel a lot like crossing borders, because rules, procedures, and timelines can vary widely from one county to the next. Use the County Listings Guidebook to find a county's contact information, then call or visit the county directly to confirm their list of rules and procedures for delinquent taxes.

RS: If you're traveling for an auction, it's best to contact the county before you leave home. In most cases, the treasurer's office or tax collector's office is the right place to start, though titles and departments can vary by state. If you run into a dead end, simply ask to speak with whoever handles delinquent property taxes. County officials can often be a valuable resource, so a patient, respectful approach goes a long way. When you're clear about what you're looking for and easy to work with, they're often willing to help however they can.

TIP: A small gesture of appreciation and respect for a county official's time can go a long way (like a coffee and a donut)!

The Secret Investment

So what's the "secret" investment people rarely talk about? It's tax liens and tax deeds. Not because they're hidden, but because they tend to fly under the radar. This system has been around for many years, and it's been quietly utilized by banks and institutional investors who understand how the rules work.

What makes tax lien certificates different is that they don't rely on hype or timing the market. The interest rates, penalties, and timelines are all set by law, which means that you can understand the framework before you invest. This kind of structure is often hard to find in a world where many investments depend on sentiment, speculation, or the right timing. While tax liens aren't completely risk-free, they are simply different (and often more transparent) than many traditional investments. Grasping a clear understanding of how the process works, where the safeguards are, and where risks can still exist is a crucial part of investing responsibly in this space.

What is a Tax Lien Certificate?

A tax lien is a legal claim placed against a property when the property taxes haven't been paid. In most cases, this applies to real estate, though tax liens can also be attached to certain types of personal property depending on the situation.

When taxes go unpaid, the local government records a lien against the property. This gives the government the legal right to collect the amount owed. Rather than immediately seizing the property, the lien acts as a claim that must be resolved before the property can be sold or refinanced.

Tax liens don't exist arbitrarily, they're created through established laws and procedures. If there is ever a dispute about whether a lien is valid, a court can step in to review the circumstances and determine whether the claim is legitimate. For that reason, liens must be filed properly and with legal grounds behind them.

Example: If a plumber completes work for a homeowner and isn't paid as agreed, the plumber may file a lien against the property. This type of lien attaches to the home and remains in place until the debt is paid or the property is sold. When the home is sold, any valid liens must be satisfied before ownership can transfer to the new buyer.

Traditionally, liens follow a simple rule: whoever records first is paid first. Lien priority works much like the rungs of a ladder, in that the top rung is reached before the next one down. In the same way, the lien recorded earliest generally has the first claim on any funds when the property owner pays or when the property is sold.

Example: A typical order in which liens may appear on a property looks something like this: a first mortgage, a second mortgage, a secured home equity line of credit, an IRS lien, and then a mechanic's lien.

Tax liens don't fit neatly into this sequence, because their priority isn't based on when a homeowner took out a loan. Instead, tax liens are granted priority by law. States give unpaid property taxes senior status, meaning a tax lien generally takes precedence over other liens regardless of when those other liens were recorded. This legal priority is what places tax liens ahead of mortgages and other claims in many jurisdictions.

The Process

Everything begins when a property owner fails to pay their property taxes. This can happen for many reasons, such as financial strain, illness, divorce, or simply falling behind. In more than 3,300 counties across the United States, unpaid property taxes add up quickly and create funding gaps for local governments.

Property taxes fund essential services like schools, roads, and public safety. Counties generally aren't allowed to operate at a deficit, and because of this, they need a way to recover that revenue without waiting years for delinquent taxpayers to catch up. To do this, many counties allow investors to pay the outstanding taxes on behalf of the property owner. Once taxes go unpaid, the amount owed becomes a lien recorded against the property.

The county sells this lien in the form of a tax lien certificate, receiving immediate funds while the property owner is given additional time to repay. If the taxes are eventually paid, the investor is repaid according to the interest rate or penalty set by state law. The rules vary by location, which is why understanding local procedures is a critical part of the process.

Investor takeaway: Tax lien investing works because it fills a funding gap for local governments while giving investors a clearly defined position backed by real property.

Each state gives property owners a set amount of time to pay overdue property taxes. When those taxes remain unpaid, counties use other methods to recover the money. In lien states, delinquent taxes are offered at auction as tax lien certificates. These auctions take place in more than 3,300 counties nationwide, with lien amounts ranging from hundreds of dollars to several million, depending on the property. Once a tax lien certificate is sold, the redemption period then begins. This is the window during which the property owner (and often the mortgage lender) can still pay the taxes owed and clear the lien.

RS: Each county's redemption period varies. It begins on the day the tax lien certificate is sold and can last anywhere from 6 months to 4 years, depending on the state and county.

To redeem the lien, the property owner must pay the taxes owed, plus the interest or penalty set by state law (often around 8–18% annually, or structured as penalties that can reach 25–36%). If the lien is redeemed, the investor is paid under those terms. If it isn't, the lien holder may have the right to move toward ownership of the property.

Tax lien certificates are secured by real estate, and the amount invested is often a small slice of the property's actual value (it's common to see liens representing 5–10% of market value). If the delinquent property owner does not pay off the lien, you can liquidate the property to recoup your initial investment and keep the remainder. This is why tax liens can be such an incredible investment, as you can either receive a high guaranteed rate of return, or a property for a fraction of the price of its market value.

What is a Tax Deed?

In a deed state, the process works differently. You're not purchasing a tax lien certificate, you're purchasing the property itself at the auction. In most deed states, the property is sold without a redemption period, which means that ownership transfers once the required steps are completed. There are exceptions, though, and some states (like Georgia and Texas) handle this differently.

In deed states, properties generally fall into one of two categories:

1. The county has already completed the foreclosure process, and the property is ready to be sold outright at auction.
2. The deed is sold with a redemption period still attached, giving the former owner a limited amount of time to reclaim the property.

Case Study:

Texas is a good example of how this can work. Texas is a deed state, but properties come with a six-month redemption period. During that time, the former owner can redeem the property by paying the purchase price plus a 25% penalty, which effectively works out to 50% annually. While the redemption period is active, the deed holder is typically allowed to maintain the property and collect rent. Any documented maintenance costs may also be reimbursed with the same penalty if the property is redeemed.

In other redeemable deed states (such as Georgia and Tennessee), if the redemption period expires without payment, additional steps may still be required before ownership is fully secured. In many cases, this involves a foreclosure process. Counties usually provide clear, step-by-step guidance for this, which often includes notifying interested parties by certified mail. If the property is later sold at auction, the minimum bid is generally based on the total costs incurred, such as back taxes, foreclosure expenses, advertising, and recording fees.

Why Haven't I Heard of This?

In tax lien and deed investing, you're dealing directly with the county. There's no broker, fund manager, or intermediary standing between you and the transaction. That's different from investments like stocks, bonds, or mutual funds, where multiple layers of middlemen are often involved and fees are built into each trade.

Counties also operate under strict rules when it comes to how these auctions are communicated. They aren't in the business of promoting investing opportunities. In most cases, counties are limited to publishing basic legal notices (often in a local newspaper a few weeks before the auction) primarily to notify property owners, not to attract investors. As a result, these opportunities tend to remain visible mainly to those who know where to look.

Choosing a County

One of the most common questions is, "Which county should I start in?" The short answer is that opportunities exist in almost every county. The key early on is not to get overwhelmed. For your first auction, it's often best to attend simply to observe and learn the process, without the pressure to buy.

Once you're familiar with how auctions work, the next step is choosing a county that fits your approach. Start by asking yourself the following:

1. Do I prefer liens or deeds?

Liens:

You're comfortable waiting through a redemption period, which can range from 2 months to 3 years. You understand that outcomes may vary; either the lien is redeemed and you're repaid with interest, or the process may eventually move toward property ownership under state law.

Deeds:

You prefer purchasing property directly at auction and moving more quickly toward resale or use. You're comfortable competing with other bidders and understand that while you may pay more upfront than with a lien, you're still aiming to buy below market value.

TIP: Choosing between liens and deeds immediately narrows your options, eliminating roughly half the states and making it easier to focus your research.

2. Are travel expenses a factor?

Yes:

You prefer to stay close to home, driving to nearby counties or states. Or you plan to attend auctions in areas where you already have a place to stay, keeping costs low while you learn.

No:

You're open to traveling wherever the opportunity makes sense. You're willing to research and attend auctions in any state that fits your criteria, regardless of distance.

TIP: Some investors plan auction visits around personal travel, allowing the trip to serve both purposes. In certain cases these expenses may be tax deductible, so always confirm with your accountant.

3. Which county should I choose within a state?

- Contact each county in the state(s) you're considering. Contact information for more than 3,300 counties is included in the County Research Blue Pages at the back of this course.
- Use your County Research Lists to guide those conversations and make sure you're asking the right questions (see pages 13–14).

TIP: When speaking with a county, ask to be placed on their electronic or postal mailing list so you're notified of any upcoming auctions.

4. What if I still can't decide?

- Narrow your choices down to two counties and pick one. Yes, even something as simple as proximity to the beach can break the tie. The point is to keep moving forward!

When you're just getting started, choosing your first auction often feels like the biggest hurdle. After you've attended a few, that hesitation tends to disappear, and the decision-making process becomes much easier.

Choosing a Property

Researching properties ahead of time is essential. The goal is to understand what you're bidding on and reduce the risk of overpaying. Below is a simple, repeatable process for identifying properties that fit your criteria:

1. Obtain the list of tax-delinquent properties

First, locate the courthouse of the county you have chosen.

RS: Proceed to the treasurer's office or tax collector's department. Ask to obtain a list of the tax defaulted properties to be auctioned.

If you're planning to purchase over the counter (meaning you're buying a lien or deed without attending an auction) you may need to clarify what you're asking for when speaking with county staff, because the name of this list varies from county to county.

Example: A helpful way to explain it is to say, "I'm looking for the list of properties that didn't sell at auction and are now held by the county." In most cases, you'll hear something like, "Oh, you mean the lands available list," "struck-off list," "surplus list," or "over-the-counter list."

2. Narrow down the list.

Lists of tax-delinquent properties can range from just a few entries to 20,000 or more, and they're constantly changing as owners redeem. In some counties, redemption is allowed right up until an hour before the auction, and it's not unusual for 25–30% of a list to redeem the morning of the sale.

RS: Researching as close to the auction date as possible helps avoid spending time on properties that won't make it to auction. Also keep in mind that last-minute changes will affect everyone bidding at the auction, not just you.

- Once you obtain the list, it's your responsibility to keep it current by checking with the county for recent redemptions.
- Start narrowing down the list by price. Some properties may have balances well beyond what you're comfortable investing.
- Decide ahead of time whether you'd rather spread your capital across several smaller properties or focus on one larger purchase.
- When investing in deeds, higher purchase prices often come with higher potential upside, but also higher exposure.

Example: A deed purchased for $1,000 might resell for $5,000, while a $10,000 deed could be worth $50,000 or more. In some cases, one larger deal can produce results comparable to multiple smaller ones, with far less time and effort involved.

TIP: If your goal with liens is the possibility of eventual property ownership, spreading your investment across several lower-value TLCs can improve your chances that one does not redeem.

TIP: If you are buying TLCs primarily for interest income, we recommend higher-value liens, since they allow you to focus on fewer properties during your research process.

3. Determine which of the following you would prefer to invest in:

- Residential (single-family, multi-family, condos, duplexes)
- Commercial
- Industrial
- Agricultural
- Unimproved Land (without access to utilities)
- Improved Land (with access to utilities)

TIP: Residential properties tend to attract the widest pool of buyers, which is why many investors choose to start there before branching into other property types.

4. Eliminate the properties that are located in undesirable areas.

Understanding which neighbourhoods to avoid can take time, especially if you're researching a county from a distance. This is where websites like AreaVibes or NeighborhoodScout can be helpful. These platforms analyze public data and local statistics (such as crime rates, school quality, demographics, and livability scores) to give you a clearer picture of what an area is like, giving you a detailed insight into why a certain area may carry higher risk or lower resale demand.

At this point, you should have a more manageable list of properties that fit your criteria. Next, decide how many you can realistically view with the time you have available. Take into account the amount of time needed to navigate, locate, view, and inspect each property. From there, select the number of properties you can reasonably inspect and record their parcel ID numbers for further research.

TIP: Counties maintain official public records that can be accessed through the county office, and many also provide online access. Use the parcel ID numbers to research ownership history, liens, assessments, and other relevant details for each property.

Key Things To Consider

a) The physical address vs. mailing address

Pay attention to whether the property's mailing address matches its physical address. When the two are different, it can be a sign that the owner isn't regularly receiving notices about the delinquent taxes. In those cases, redemption may be less likely, which can be worth noting if you're buying tax lien certificates with the possibility of eventual property ownership in mind.

When the mailing and physical addresses match, the owner is more likely to be aware of the delinquency and respond. These properties tend to redeem more often, which may be a better fit if your goal is to earn interest rather than pursue the property itself.

b) The assessed value of the property

The assessed value gives you a rough reference point for what the property may be worth.

RS: Counties can assess properties anywhere from 10% to 200% of market value, depending on local practices. While this number isn't definitive, it helps provide context when comparing properties.

c) The outstanding taxes due

Look closely at how much is owed and how long the taxes have been delinquent.

TIP: Properties that have been delinquent for an extended period of time often carry higher balances, which may exceed what you're comfortable investing. At the same time, longer delinquency timeframes can indicate a lower likelihood of redemption. This is a trade-off you'll need to consider based on your goals and budget.

d) The mortgage balance

Find out whether an existing mortgage remains attached to the property.

Example: In many states, mortgages and certain liens are wiped out through the tax sale process, but it's important to understand exactly how the sale works in that state. Pennsylvania typically holds an Upset Tax Sale first. At this stage, the sale clears the delinquent taxes, but mortgages and other liens remain attached to the property. If the property still doesn't sell, it may move to a Judicial Tax Sale, where liens and mortgages are usually discharged.

The takeaway here is that every state (and sometimes each county) handles this process differently, so be sure to always review the local rules carefully as part of your due diligence.

e) Available property photos

Make sure the photo appears current. Details like newer vehicles, recent construction, or updated surroundings can help you gauge whether the image is still relevant.

f) The last recorded sale price of the property

The most recent sale price can offer a useful benchmark. In general, the more recent the sale, the more relevant it is when estimating current market value.

Tools you'll need to bring when researching at the county:

- Smartphone (for maps and photos)
- Notepad
- Parcel List
- Digital Camera (if needed)
- Cell phone

Purchasing Unsold Liens and Deeds

When a property doesn't sell at auction, it doesn't just disappear. Instead, the county is left holding an inventory of unsold liens or deeds. These properties are placed on a list, often called a strike-off list, surplus list, struck-off-to-state list, or parcel list. These lists are typically available to investors during and after a tax lien sale.

RS: These lists are most often found through the Client Services Department or the Treasurer's Office. They may be provided in different formats, including printed copies, digital files, or online access, and some counties charge a fee to obtain them. Purchasing properties from these lists is commonly referred to as assignment purchasing.

Most counties allow assignment purchases to be made by mail or over the counter. To do so, the buyer submits a list of desired parcels to the treasurer's office along with payment (usually in the form of a cashier's check, certified check, money order, or wire transfer) covering the estimated total of taxes, interest, and fees due.

If the amount submitted exceeds what's owed, the county will typically issue a refund. Any parcels not fully covered by the funds remain available to other buyers. Requests are then processed in the order they're received, and assignments generally become available once all auction-week transactions have been completed.

RS: Because unsold assignments are often prepared for re-auction at the next tax sale, counties usually set a firm deadline for assignment purchases. The county office can confirm this date.

Tip: Make sure the certificate of purchase clearly states "assignment." This helps avoid confusion and prevents the purchase from being mistakenly processed as a standard redemption-period lien.

RS: Interest earned on an assignment purchase is set by state law and typically falls between 8% and 50%, depending on the jurisdiction.

Least Likely to be Redeemed

If your goal is to identify liens or deeds that are less likely to be redeemed, certain property characteristics tend to show up more often than others. No single factor is definitive, but looking for one or more of the following can help you assess redemption risk more realistically:

1. Out-of-state ownership

One of the easiest signs to spot this is when the mailing address doesn't match the property address, especially if it's in another state. In many cases, that means the owner isn't closely paying attention and may not even be aware the taxes are delinquent.

2. Two names on the title

When multiple owners are involved, things can get complicated. Divorce, separation, or other shared-ownership situations sometimes leads to indecision, and neither party may want to put more money into a property they might not end up keeping.

3. Returned mail in the property file

If the county has records showing mail being returned, that's worth noting. Owners are responsible for keeping their address updated, and when they don't, tax notices may never reach them, which can delay or prevent any action on their part.

4. Vacant property

A vacant property can be a sign the owner has already walked away. While that's not always the case, vacancy often goes hand-in-hand with a lack of follow-through on unpaid taxes.

5. Poor maintenance

When a property has clearly been neglected, it can indicate the owner has lost interest or doesn't have the resources to keep it up. While these properties may require more work, they can also present opportunities for investors who understand the risks and costs involved.

MISCELLANEOUS:

- Labor
- Carpentry

Note: On the following page are general rule-of-thumb estimates only. The actual costs will vary based on location, market conditions, the level of upgrades, and local pricing practices.

Property Renovation Cost Estimates

Labor guideline:

A skilled, licensed, bonded, and insured contractor with one helper typically runs around $600 – $1000 per day, or $75 – $125 per hour for skilled labour, depending on location and scope.

Exterior Pricing Estimates

- Roofing (tear-off included): $6 – $10 per sq. ft.
 - Add 10–20% for steep pitch or difficult access
- Windows (installed): $500 – $1,200 per unit
- Doors (basic): $400 – $1,200
- Property Cleanup: $500 – $2000 (depending on volume)
- Landscaping (basic): $1,500 – $5,000+
- Guttering (roofline and downspouts): $12 – $25 per linear foot
- Vinyl siding (average 2–3 bedroom home): $10,000 – $18,000
- Exterior paint:
 - 2-bedroom house: $3,000 – $5,000
 - 3-bedroom house: $4,000 – $7,000
 - Add $1,000+ for extensive prep work, scraping, or repairs

Interior Pricing Estimates

- Kitchen remodel: $20,000+
- Bathroom remodel: $10,000+
- Carpet (builder-grade, installed with pad): $3.00 – $6.00 per sq. ft.
- Ceramic tile: $10 – $20 per sq. ft. (varies by material)
- Hardwood floors (refinishing): $4.00 – $8.00 per sq. ft.
- Hardwood floors (new): $12 – $20 per sq. ft.
- Interior paint: $500 per room (add for high ceilings or difficult windows)
- Basement drying / moisture remediation: $3,000 – $10,000 (depending on severity)

Systems Pricing Estimates

- Plumbing: $6,000 – $15,000 to replace galvanized pipe with PVC or PEX
 - Copper: $10,000 – $20,000+
- Electrical:
 - New panel: $2,000 – $4,000
 - Full upgrade to 150-amp service: $5,000 – $10,000+
- Furnace (easy access): $4,000 – $8,000
- Air conditioning (add-on, easy access): $4,000 – $9,000
- Heat & Air conditioning system (HVAC):
 - Single system: $8,000 – $15,000
 - Dual system (2 zones): $15,000 – $25,000+

Auctions

Before attending any auction, take the time to review the county's auction rules. Each county operates a little differently, and knowing the details ahead of time can prevent costly mistakes. Pay close attention to the following:

- Who is conducting the auction (a private firm or a county official)
- Where the auction will be held
- What time you should arrive
- When delinquent taxpayers are no longer eligible to redeem
- How the bidding process works
- Whether a redemption period applies after purchasing a tax lien or deed
- Accepted methods of payment
- When payment is due
- What happens if a winning bidder fails to meet payment requirements
- Whether a re-auction is held the same day
- Whether pre-registration is required

Example: Los Angeles requires bidders to pre-register at least two weeks before the auction, while some states do not allow pre-registration at all.

TIP: Some counties will offer financing programs to the investor. RS: For example, a county may require 20% down with the remaining balance due within 6 months.

In the days leading up to the auction, find out whether pre-registration is allowed. Taking care of this ahead of time removes one task from auction day and can make the experience far less rushed. It also gives you a better chance to arrive rested and focused.

As a general rule of thumb, a tax deed auction with 30–40 properties offers a better chance of finding something worth pursuing, especially if you’ve traveled to attend. That being said, this isn’t a hard rule, as some smaller auctions with as few as 10–15 properties can still produce solid opportunities if you’ve done your homework.

Tax lien auctions are often easier to navigate, particularly for newer investors. Many counties offer tax lien certificates in large volumes, sometimes 20,000 or more at a single sale. Auctions of that size often leave plenty of certificates unsold, which can be useful if you plan to purchase over the counter later.

RS: Never attend an auction with a “no matter what, I’m coming home with a property” mindset.

The approach stated above tends to lead to overbidding and poor decisions, which can quickly erase your margin. Instead, treat each auction as part of the learning process. Even if you don’t purchase anything, the experience gained will help sharpen your judgment, and that’s what will pay off over time.

Out of Country Traveling Tips

Once you've chosen your destination, a little preparation can save you time, money, and unnecessary stress. Keep the following in mind as you plan your trip.

Set up a U.S. bank account

Having a U.S. bank account in place before traveling can eliminate a lot of friction on auction day. It makes moving funds easier and avoids the risks and scrutiny that come with carrying large amounts of cash across the border. Many banks allow accounts to be set up online, but remember that wiring funds typically requires you to be an established account holder and may still involve in-branch access.

Some investors prefer larger national banks with widespread branch networks. Depending on where you're traveling, choosing a bank with a local presence can make same-day issues much easier to resolve. Other fund transfer options include services like wire transfers or online payment platforms, though availability and acceptance vary by county.

TIP: Ensure your banking institution has a branch in the city you will be visiting, and plan for cash needs on auction day. Many ATMs have daily withdrawal limits, often around $500.

Health Insurance

It's best to consider health coverage when traveling to the States. Canadian health benefits typically don't extend across the border, and medical expenses can add up quickly. Many credit cards offer short-term travel insurance at a low annual cost, which can come in handy. If you don't have a credit card, coverage may also be available through an auto association or private insurer.

Long-distance calling

Factor in communication costs, especially when crossing borders. Many mobile carriers offer U.S. calling add-ons at reasonable rates, and prepaid calling cards can still be useful if you have access to a landline.

TIP: Be cautious with prepaid calling cards. While some advertise extremely low per-minute rates, they often include connection fees or minimum charges that aren't obvious at first, so always be sure to read the fine print before relying on them.

When booking flights, focus on flexibility and total cost rather than a specific airline. In Canada, major carriers like Air Canada and WestJet often run competitive fare sales, especially when booked early or during off-peak travel periods. If you're traveling to a border state, it can sometimes be more cost-effective to fly within Canada and rent a vehicle to cross the border, rather than flying directly into a U.S. city.

Example: In some cases, indirect travel can significantly reduce costs, such as flying to a nearby Canadian city at a lower fare and completing the trip by car. This approach won't work everywhere, but it's worth checking when destinations are close to the border.

Credit cards

Credit cards can be useful tools when used intentionally. Many cards include built-in protections on purchases made with the card, such as trip interruption coverage, rental car insurance, and baggage protection. In some cases, this coverage can also extend to a travel companion. Some cards also offer reward programs that can offset travel costs over time when used responsibly.

RS: Check directly with your credit card issuer to understand what coverage and benefits actually apply to your card.

Rental cars

Pre-booking your rental car can save time and reduce stress, so we highly recommend it. Having everything arranged in advance also allows you to leave the airport quickly and stay focused on the purpose of your trip.

Tip: Age requirements vary by company and location. Many rental agencies now rent to drivers 21–24 with a surcharge, while some restrict rentals to 25 and older. Always make sure to confirm age policies before booking.

Crossing the Border

Make sure you have proper identification before traveling. A valid passport is now the standard document for cross-border travel into the U.S., and relying on a birth certificate alone is no longer sufficient for most travelers.

Be honest and transparent with customs officials. If you're carrying more than $10,000 per person, you are required to declare it. This is one reason many investors choose to move funds via wire transfer instead of carrying large amounts of cash.

Give yourself extra time

Build buffer time into your travel plans. Allowing an extra 2–3 hours helps account for delays such as traffic, rental issues, weather, or longer border wait times. Arriving calm and prepared is always better than rushing into an auction.

Note: Laws, procedures, pricing, and policies discussed in this section are subject to change and may vary by jurisdiction. Use this information as a starting point, and always verify current details with the appropriate county office or service provider.

After You Acquire a Property

If you've acquired real property in a county, take care of the following before you leave the area, as doing this early can save time and prevent problems later:

1. Line up local resources

Make sure you have access to local service providers, such as contractors, cleaners, landscapers, and real estate professionals.

2. Collect realtor contacts

Get the names and phone numbers of several local realtors who actively work in the area. Even if you don't plan to list right away, these contacts can be valuable.

3. Document the property thoroughly

Take detailed photos of both the interior and exterior. Clear, well-lit images are useful for records, marketing, and future comparisons.

4. Post local flyers

Community bulletin boards at grocery stores, gas stations, and similar locations can still be effective for generating local interest, especially in smaller markets.

5. Gather local sale data

Pick up at least two local for-sale-by-owner publications or review comparable local listings online, as these can help with pricing and advertising decisions.

6. Build local contacts

Collect the names and numbers of people in the area who can help keep an eye on the property or assist with small tasks if needed.

7. Identify neighbouring owners

Get the names and addresses of adjacent property owners. Neighbours are sometimes interested buyers, and they can also be a valuable source of local insight.

TIP: Adjacent property owner information can usually be found through the county office by searching parcel numbers immediately above and below your own.

Creative Sale Options

Before purchasing any property, pause and ask a simple question: If I end up owning this, what's my plan? More specifically, how will I turn it into a profit, and how quickly? Thinking this through ahead of time keeps you from owning something without a clear exit strategy.

It often makes sense to start simple. Adjacent property owners are a natural first audience, especially when dealing with vacant land. Neighbours may be willing to buy at 25–50% below market value to expand their footprint or protect their surroundings. In this light, it may be more effective to sell quickly and move on, rather than holding out for top dollar.

When you price at full market value, you're competing with nearly everything else that's for sale. Keep in mind that supply usually outweighs demand, so pricing below market (especially for buyers who can close quickly with cash) puts you in a much smaller, more motivated segment of the market.

Another option is offering secured owner financing. This can increase the sale price and create ongoing income through interest. A common approach is to structure the deal so your initial investment is recovered upfront as the down payment, with future payments representing profit beyond that base.

Inform local realtors about the property, but be cautious about listing it outright. Since agents are managing many listings, there's no guarantee that yours will receive priority. If you do choose to list, consider an agreement that allows you to sell the property yourself, because a flat administrative fee is often more practical than a full commission. If the agent brings the buyer, they earn the full commission.

Remember that traditional local advertising can still be effective, particularly in smaller markets. Community newspapers, bulletin boards, and neighbourhood publications often reach buyers who are actively looking for affordable opportunities.

Examples:

- A small vacant lot advertised in a local paper as “Buildable lot - priced to sell” attracts a nearby homeowner looking to expand their yard.
- A fixer-upper listed with “Cash sale, flexible closing” draws interest from a local contractor who values speed over condition.
- A rural parcel advertised as “Below market - owner financing available” appeals to a buyer who can’t qualify for traditional financing.

Online platforms can further expand your reach. General marketplaces, real estate listing sites, and investor-focused platforms can all be useful, depending on the property type and price point. The key is to place the property where motivated buyers are already looking.

Finally, don’t overlook local real estate investment groups. These buyers are often actively searching for discounted properties and can move quickly. Many groups also publish meeting details and contact information online, making them easy to find before or after an auction.

Contracts for Deed

Once you’ve acquired a property, whether through a tax deed sale or after a lien process, one way to expand your buyer pool is by offering owner financing through a contract for deed. This approach is often used when buyers want the property but can’t qualify for traditional bank financing.

In a contract for deed, you remain the legal owner until the agreed-upon price is paid in full. The buyer takes possession of the property and makes scheduled payments to you, usually with interest. Only after the final payment is made does the deed transfer to the buyer. These agreements are commonly paired with buyer events or local marketing, where demand and urgency are already established.

During the contract term, the buyer is typically responsible for property taxes, insurance, and maintenance. The exact requirements will vary by state, so any contracts made should always be structured to comply with the local law.

Contracts for Deed: Practical Advantages and Trade-Offs

Advantages

- Allows you to sell to buyers who cannot obtain bank financing
- Can support a higher sale price due to financing flexibility
- Creates ongoing cash flow through interest payments
- Often involves lower closing costs than traditional sales
- You retain title until the buyer completes all payments

Trade-Offs

- You may need to manage the contract if payments stop
- Buyer does not build traditional equity until the contract is completed
- Legal requirements vary by state and must be followed carefully
- Enforcement can take time if the buyer defaults

These options are most effective when they're considered early. Whether you plan to sell quickly, offer owner financing, or hold for income, that plan should shape how you buy and how you market. The key is to understand where you can be flexible, taking steps to reduce any pressure after you acquire the property, and to stay in control when it's time to sell.

Every marketing and financing choice you make is part of an exit strategy. The clearer you are about how you plan to sell before buying anything, the easier it becomes to structure deals that align with your goals instead of forcing decisions later.

Lease Optioning

“Give a man secure possession of a bleak rock, and he will turn it into a garden; give him a nine years’ lease of a garden, and he will convert it into a desert.” - Arthur Young

The idea stated in the above quote sits at the heart of lease optioning, because when someone has a meaningful stake in a property, they will often treat it with more care and consideration. A lease option is essentially a rental agreement that gives the tenant the right to purchase the property, either during the lease term or at its end.

Under this structure, the tenant rents the property for a set period, often three to five years, with the option to buy it later. If they choose to exercise that option, a portion of the rent they’ve already paid is typically credited toward the purchase price.

Why sell a property this way?

- You receive money upfront
- Monthly payments are often higher than standard rent
- Tenants tend to take better care of the property
- You may achieve a higher sale price than with a quick cash sale

Why would a buyer agree to this?

- They may need time to repair credit or qualify for a mortgage
- Payments are predictable and locked in during the lease term
- As long as payments are current, they can’t be forced to move
- If structured properly, they may benefit from certain tax advantages
- They can exercise the purchase option at any point during the agreement
- If the market value increases, they still buy at the agreed-upon price

What if the buyer doesn't exercise this option?

- At the end of the term, the buyer either completes the purchase or the property remains yours
- You may choose to extend the agreement
- You can adjust rent to reflect market conditions, within legal limits
- You can bring in a new tenant
- You can sell the property outright, often after appreciation over time

Note: Like any exit strategy, lease optioning comes with its own trade-offs. While it can offer flexibility, stronger cash flow, and higher pricing potential, it also requires patience, clear agreements, and a realistic view of the risks involved. Lease optioning tends to work best when you're not in a rush to exit, and if the property holds long-term appeal. On top of that, the deal still makes sense even if the option is never exercised, so we recommend taking time to think through how long your capital may be tied up, as that will help you decide whether a lease option truly makes the most sense.

What are My Risks?

Every investment comes with risk, and tax lien investing is no different. The key difference here is that the risks are usually known ahead of time and tied to clear rules. If you understand them going in, there are very few surprises. Here are the primary risks that you should strongly consider:

Your capital is tied up

Tax lien certificates aren't liquid investments. Once you invest, that money is committed until the lien is redeemed or otherwise resolved under state law. That's why it's important to only use capital you won't need in the short term, and never emergency funds.

In some areas, liens can be transferred to other investors, although this depends on local rules and could involve extra fees. While having funds tied up can feel limiting, many investors see this as a benefit, as it removes the temptation to spend the money elsewhere, and encourages a patient and disciplined strategy.

The property owner files for bankruptcy

If a property owner files for bankruptcy, the tax debt itself usually doesn't disappear. Property taxes are generally considered a secured obligation tied to the property, which means the lien typically remains in place. What bankruptcy mainly affects is timing.

When bankruptcy is filed, the court issues what's called an automatic stay. This temporarily stops most collection actions (including foreclosure) while the court reviews the debtor's financial situation. During this period, you may have to wait before taking further action on the lien.

In some situations, particularly with estates where there are no heirs or additional assets, unpaid taxes can eventually move toward foreclosure. It's not something an investor should rely on as a primary outcome, but it does happen from time to time.

Tip: When a relatively small tax lien is attached to a much higher-value property, foreclosure can result in ownership rather than repayment. This outcome is uncommon, but it highlights why understanding the property itself is always important.

If you foreclose on a property, you are in the first position as the TLC holder, which means that the tax lien certificate has priority over other liens and mortgages. You can sell the property for below market value and still gain back your total investment, plus the earned interest. The other lien holders, which include such facilities as the bank and mortgage company, will get the leftovers.

Paying more than the property is worth

This is one risk that you largely control. Overpaying usually occurs when someone's research is rushed or incomplete, or when their bidding is driven by emotion rather than the numbers. Performing careful due diligence is all about understanding the property's value, location, condition, and local rules, and it can often inform you well enough to avoid this costly mistake.

At the end of the day, good research is about protecting yourself. The more clearly you understand what you're buying, the less likely you are to find yourself backtracking later or spending money to solve problems that could have been avoided from the start.

Getting Your Business Started

Working for yourself comes with flexibility, responsibility, and a learning curve. The goal early on isn't to be perfect, it's to set up simple systems that support you as you grow. The following guidelines will help you lay a solid foundation.

Setting Up Your Business

One of the first steps many investors take is registering a business name through their local registry office. There's usually a fee involved, but having a formal business structure can make it easier to track expenses and separate personal activity from investing activity.

Once your business is set up, many costs related to researching, traveling, and attending auctions may qualify as business expenses when handled properly. How those expenses are treated will depend on your structure, location, and circumstances.

RS: Always consult with your accountant or attorney to understand what applies to you and how to stay compliant.

Getting Organized

We cannot stress enough the importance of being organized in this business. Saving all of your receipts for your accountant to prove your purchases is key. Also be sure to write down who you were with and what aspect of business you discussed, even if it is a simple note on the back of a restaurant receipt.

You should also have a filing system to sort and categorize all your receipts, such as travel expenses, office supplies, food, fuel, lodging, personal hygiene, etc. You also need folders for your TLCs research and each county you visit. These simple systems will save you a lot of time when you need to locate a document or find information.

Smartphones and Tablets

Modern tools make staying organized so much easier. Calendar apps are especially useful for tracking auction dates, deadlines, and follow-ups.

Example: Many investors set calendar reminders a month ahead of upcoming auctions. That window usually provides enough time to research, make travel plans, and decide whether attending that particular auction makes sense.

Reminders can also help track lien redemption timelines, meetings, payment due dates, and personal commitments - anything you don't want slipping through the cracks!

Notes apps are another underrated tool that we often use to capture ideas, observations, or questions as they come up. Simply knowing that your thoughts are saved can make it much easier to stay focused.

Contacts can also be organized by their county or location. Grouping realtors, county officials, and service providers this way makes it easy to find the right person when you need them.

Being intentional about capturing information on your phone or tablet can make a real difference. When your notes, contacts, documents, and reminders are all in one place, you're never scrambling to find something, and it's accessible whenever you need it.

There are plenty of useful apps and online tools that can help streamline your workflow and save time. Two commonly used apps are Evernote and Google Docs - both are widely available, free to get started with, and accessible from almost any device with an internet connection. When used consistently, tools like these can become a central hub for notes, research, and documents as your investing activity grows.

What makes tools like these so useful is that they replace piles of paper and scattered notes with one reliable system. Instead of worrying about where something was written down, you can focus on the work itself. Ensuring that all your auction dates, county rules, opening bids, pricing notes, and research details all live in one place makes them easy to find at the time you need them.

With Google Docs, you can also use spreadsheets to track your numbers (things like expenses, bids, returns, and anything else that matters to your business). Those files can be updated from anywhere and shared easily, whether that's with a partner or your accountant. Simple systems like this go a long way toward keeping your investing organized and stress-free!

Putting Retirement Money to Work

You may be thinking, “I want to invest, but most of my money is tied up in a retirement account.” That’s a common situation, and in some cases, there are ways to invest using retirement funds without liquidating them outright.

Certain retirement accounts can be structured as self-directed, which allows you to choose alternative investments, including real estate-related opportunities. This isn’t something to rush into, but for investors who want more control over how their retirement funds are deployed, it can be worth exploring.

RS: Always consult with an attorney or qualified retirement specialist before making changes to your retirement accounts.

Another tool commonly used in real estate investing is the 1031 exchange. This allows investors to defer capital gains taxes by reinvesting proceeds from one real estate sale into another qualifying property, provided that specific rules and timelines are followed. While this strategy doesn’t eliminate taxes, it can preserve capital and keep your money working longer.

Used thoughtfully, approaches like these can help investors grow and reposition their capital over time. The key is understanding the rules, getting proper guidance, and making sure that each strategy aligns with your broader financial plan.

Protecting Yourself

As your investing activity grows, it's important to think about how you hold assets and manage risk. One common approach is using a formal business entity. When set up correctly, an entity can help separate your personal finances from your investing activities and add a layer of protection and structure to your business.

Entities such as limited partnerships (LPs) and limited liability companies (LLCs) are often used by real estate investors. These structures can help with organization, privacy, and tax planning, depending on how they're set up and used. While no structure makes you immune from lawsuits, owning property through an entity can help limit personal exposure when combined with proper insurance and professional guidance.

Some investors also use combinations of entities and trusts to further separate ownership and management. This isn't to hide any assets or remove risk entirely, it's to create clear boundaries between you and the properties you invest in.

Certain states are commonly chosen for entity registration due to their business-friendly regulations and low annual corporate fees. Both Florida and Nevada are often mentioned for these reasons, but where you decide to register should be based on where you operate, own property, and file taxes, not just where fees are the lowest.

Setting Goals

One of the biggest challenges of working for yourself is the lack of built-in structure. There's no manager setting deadlines, no clear roadmap, and no one telling you whether you're doing things right. That freedom can be powerful, but without direction, it can also lead to stalled progress.

That's why successful entrepreneurs create their own structure through clear, intentional goals. Progress rarely happens by accident; it's the result of making deliberate choices and giving yourself something concrete to work toward.

Written goals are one of the simplest tools for creating that direction. When your goals are defined and written down, they become easier to prioritize, measure, and revisit. They give you something to check against when decisions come up and help keep you focused when distractions creep in.

TIP: Start writing your goals down now. Even rough goals are better than none, and you can refine them as you gain experience.

It's also important to separate goals from dreams. Wanting to be financially successful or widely recognized is a dream, not a goal. While dreams are great for guiding your direction, goals are actually measurable. The only way to move toward a larger vision is by breaking it down into specific, achievable steps and working through them one at a time.

Defining Your Goals

For goals to be effective, they need to be measurable, attainable, and meaningful.

Measurable

Vague goals are hard to act on. Saying you want to be "successful," "wealthy," or "diversified" sounds motivating, but it doesn't give you anything concrete to work toward. Without a clear way to measure progress, it's impossible to know whether you're moving forward, or simply staying busy.

Example: Instead of aiming to be "financially free," define what that actually means to you. That might be a specific monthly income target, a certain number of properties, or a total asset value you want to reach within a set time frame. Clear numbers give you something to track, as well as something to adjust when needed.

Goals that can't be measured tend to drift. Even small wins technically move you forward, but without defined benchmarks, progress is easy to underestimate or ignore.

Attainable

Large goals can feel overwhelming when the gap between where you are and where you want to be seems too wide. Attainable goals help by breaking that distance into steps you can realistically take from where you are now.

Example: If your long-term vision involves building a significant real estate portfolio, an early goal might simply be attending a local auction, completing your first round of property research, or finishing an educational course. A follow-up goal could be assembling a small team, such as a realtor, title company, or contractor to support your first deal. The next step might be closing that deal.

It's key to remember that each goal builds on the last. Attainability isn't about thinking small; it's about sequencing progress in a way that keeps you moving forward.

What's attainable will also vary from person to person. Your resources, time, and responsibilities are different from anyone else's, and your goals should reflect that reality.

Meaningful

A goal can be both measurable and attainable, but still move you sideways. This often happens when goals compete with one another or don't align with how you actually want to live or work.

Example: You may want to become a full-time investor, but still need dependable income today. That doesn't have to be an all-or-nothing decision. You might dedicate part of your time to work that is steady and reliable, while advancing toward your investing goals alongside it. Over time, that balance can shift toward a more even split between the two. Eventually, with the right mindset and action, real estate investing can become your primary source of income.

Another common issue is choosing a strategy that doesn't suit you personally.

Example: Rental properties can be an effective way to generate monthly income. But if you strongly dislike managing tenants or handling maintenance calls, that approach may lead to frustration rather than freedom. In that case, the goal doesn't need to change, only the methods do. A different structure, such as owner-financed sales, might better match your preferences while still producing income.

Finally, be careful not to dismiss opportunities simply because they aren't immediately exciting.

Example: Taking an accounting course may not feel directly tied to investing success, but it can give you confidence when reviewing financials or working with professionals. Even a basic level of familiarity can help you ask better questions, as well as spot issues before they become problems.

*"Whether you think you can or you can't... you're right."
- Henry Ford*

Measures of Success

One useful way to clarify long-term goals is to think in time horizons. Ask yourself where you want to be in six months, one year, five years, and ten years. Answering these questions helps shape a clear picture of where you're headed and makes it easier to judge whether a particular investment or strategy actually supports that direction.

Long-term goals define where you want to go. Short-term goals define how you move toward it. The most effective short-term goals are usually based on output - these are things you can directly control, regardless of any outcome.

Example: Committing to attend one auction per month is an output goal. Another is setting aside one hour per day to read or research, or aiming to have three offers submitted per week. You can't control whether every offer is accepted, but you can control how consistently you show up and take action.

Over time, these output-based goals create momentum. They keep you engaged, build experience, and naturally move you closer to the longer-term results you're aiming for.

Short-term goals don't become long-term goals simply by increasing the quota. Long-term goals are best measured by results. To understand whether you're on track, ahead, or falling behind, it's important to review your progress regularly. Are you consistently meeting your output goals? Are you exceeding them, or were they set unrealistically high to begin with? More importantly, are those efforts actually moving you closer to your long-term objective, or does it still feel just as far away?

These check-ins help you decide what needs adjusting. Sometimes the long-term goal itself needs refinement. Other times, it's the short-term strategy that needs to change.

Example: If your one-year goal is to purchase an income-producing property and you achieve that in the first month, it's time to set a new long-term goal. On the other hand, if six months pass and you haven't even reviewed a property, that's a sign your short-term goals need to be reworked. Put simply, if your first six months of effort haven't brought you measurably closer, don't spend the next few months doing the same thing.

One of the most useful things about setting goals is that they are flexible. They aren't meant to trap you or lock you into a path that no longer fits. As your experience grows, your interests will shift, and as you gain a clearer understanding of your direction, your goals will naturally evolve.

A practical approach is to commit to a small number of consistent actions each week. Pick two focused tasks that move you closer toward your ultimate goal. Progress often comes from doing a few uncomfortable things repeatedly, rather than many comfortable ones occasionally.

Example: If your goal is to earn $100,000 through tax lien investing, you may eventually need to approach others for investment capital. That step can feel uncomfortable at first. Most people hesitate because they worry about rejection or how they'll be perceived, but learning to have those conversations is a great stepping stone toward a more confident, decisive investor.

Very often, the opportunities you're looking for sit just on the other side of that initial discomfort. When you continue taking small, consistent steps, you begin to open doors that wouldn't have appeared otherwise.

Closing Thoughts

Time is the one thing you can't get back. Most people don't realize how much of it they trade away until years have passed. The real opportunity here isn't just financial, it's having more control over how you spend your days and who you spend them with.

Now that you've worked through this course, you have the foundation to begin investing in tax liens and deeds thoughtfully and responsibly. The next step is simple but important: write down your short-term and long-term goals. Talking about ideas keeps them abstract, but actually planning and scheduling them is what turns intention into action.

TIP: Dedicate a notebook or a notes app on your phone or tablet to your goals. Keeping them organized and visible makes it easier to follow through and adjust as you learn.

Everything shared here is based on real-world experience and practical application. You don't need to do everything at once, and you don't need to have it all figured out on day one. Start small, stay consistent, and keep learning. And remember, you're not doing this alone! Section 3: The Total Freedom Business

The Next Step Beyond The Basics

Tax lien and tax deed investing is one of the most overlooked opportunities in real estate. It exists in every county in the United States, and it has been used by investors for decades, creating an avenue for real wealth when executed correctly. But while the opportunity is within reach, most people never make it far enough to reap any benefits. This isn't because the business is too difficult, but because the learning curve is rarely taught in a structured way.

Most beginners enter the tax sale world with genuine excitement, only to run into the same wall: conflicting information.

While one person online claims tax liens are the safest strategy, another will insist that tax deeds are the only path to serious money. Some sources say you should focus on one state at a time, and others recommend investing across multiple states immediately. Some people push creative finance strategies, while others insist you should only bid at auctions. And plenty of content makes tax sale investing sound like a shortcut to instant wealth, when the reality is far more nuanced.

As you can imagine, the result of all this back and forth is predictable. People can spend months consuming content, bouncing between strategies, and still feel unsure about what to do next.

That is exactly why we created the Total Freedom Business (TFB) program.

The TFB was designed as a structured deep dive into tax lien and tax deed investing. It's a refined system that removes confusion, eliminates any guesswork, and provides a clear path for the investor who wants to approach this business the right way.

What is the TFB Program Exactly?

The Total Freedom Business is not a quick introduction and it's certainly not a surface-level overview. It is a training system built for someone who already understands the opportunity, but needs a roadmap to make informed and calculated decisions as an investor.

The program is designed to answer the questions that inevitably appear once someone starts researching actual properties, real counties, and their respective tax sale lists. Because the truth is, the deeper you go into this business, the more questions you uncover, and that's totally normal.

The TFB is designed to bridge the gap between simply understanding these investing concepts to implementing strategies that are informed and backed by deep research. This course exists so you don't have to piece together the business through scattered sources online. Instead, it gives you an organized roadmap and a repeatable workflow which you can apply across all counties and states.

Thinking Like a TFI Operator

One of the biggest differences between people who succeed in tax sales and people who stay stuck is how they think.

A beginner will often treat every property like a mystery and every deal like a gamble. They'll get emotionally attached, chase "hot" opportunities, and second-guess every decision. They can spend hours analyzing properties that should have been eliminated in minutes, and will hesitate because they feel like they need perfect information before taking action.

A more advanced investor operates differently.

Inside the TFB, we refer to this mindset as thinking like a Total Freedom Investor (TFI) Operator. Not as a title or identity someone has to "become," but as a practical operating standard: someone who approaches tax sales with discipline, logic, and a repeatable decision-making process.

A TFI Operator doesn't rely on luck, they rely on a refined skillset, and the Total Freedom Business is designed to build that skillset.

The Core Skill Behind Every Successful Investor

The most important concept that is at the core of the TFB program is due diligence.

Due diligence is the process of verifying whether a tax lien or tax deed opportunity is actually safe and worth pursuing. It is the difference between buying a profitable deal and buying a property that becomes a long-term problem.

Many beginners underestimate how important this is. They assume that if a property looks good on a map, or if it has a low starting bid, it must be a good deal. But tax sales often include properties that come with serious complications, and these issues can often be invisible unless you know what to look for.

The TFB educates investors to identify and eliminate risks early. This includes learning how to spot common deal-killers such as:

- Access issues and landlocked parcels
- Unusable land
- Demolition-level structures
- Environmental hazards
- Hidden municipal liens
- Title red flags
- Misleading valuations
- Unrealistic resale assumptions

Instead of guessing, students learn a filtering system that allows them to make decisions faster and calmer:

- Pass (not worth pursuing)
- Hold (needs more information or clarification)
- Move (safe enough to continue)

This framework is one of the most valuable outcomes of the program because it teaches investors to stop chasing deals emotionally and start evaluating them strategically.

In tax sales, being able to confidently say “no” is one of the strongest competitive advantages you can develop.

Avoiding Analysis Paralysis

Another area where investors often get stuck is running the numbers.

Beginners frequently believe they need perfect calculations before they can take action. They assume they must know the exact ARV, rehab costs, resale timeline, and the exact ROI before making any decision. That mindset can lead to analysis paralysis, which is something investors often experience early on.

Rather than turning students into analysts, the TFB program focuses on helping you make clear, practical decisions. You learn how to work with informed ranges, realistic assumptions, and quick elimination so you can move forward without getting stuck in endless analysis. Students learn how to comp houses and land, estimate basic rehab costs without needing to be contractors, and determine whether a deal makes sense without over-engineering every detail.

They also learn how to use a Max Bid Sheet, one of the most important tools for avoiding overpaying at an auction. This shifts students away from emotional bidding and into disciplined investing.

The TFB serves to reveal how tax sale investing can go from being a shot in the dark to becoming a repeatable system with an efficient, structured approach.

Auctions, Online Platforms and OTC Deals

A common weakness of many tax sale programs is that they teach the business in theory, but not in execution. The TFB is designed around real-world experience, giving investors a close look at what happens throughout every stage of the process.

Rather than overwhelming students with everything at once, the program teaches the major pathways investors use to acquire deals, such as:

- Live auctions
- Online auction platforms
- OTC (over-the-counter) opportunities
- Pre-auction strategies and alternative deal pathways

Students learn how each environment works, what to prepare for, what mistakes to avoid, and how to follow through on tasks without getting overwhelmed.

The goal is not to make someone an expert in every lane immediately, but to help them develop competence through a clearer focus by mastering one lane. By understanding the tools that are required to achieve success in one lane, investors can then expand by seizing opportunities in other areas as they grow their business.

Why the Total Freedom Business Works

Most people do not fail in tax lien and tax deed investing because they lacked motivation or intelligence. They fail because they lack a structured process that will give them the tools to make responsible and informed decisions.

When someone begins working with real deals, the same questions come up, some of which are:

- How do I find lists consistently?
- How do I know what's worth researching?
- How do I avoid wasting time on properties that won't go to sale?
- How do I know if a property is usable?
- How do I spot red flags before I buy something?
- How do I run numbers quickly without overthinking?
- How do I stop guessing and start making confident decisions?

The TFB program is built around answering questions like these through a complete workflow, rather than offering scattered advice. It also shortens the learning curve by giving students a repeatable system that works across different counties and market conditions.

The ultimate goal is to build self-sufficient investors, who can make smart decisions and solve problems independently.

From Solo Investor to Running a Business

Tax sale investing often starts out as a solo operation, but long-term success usually comes from creating a more efficient system that doesn't solely rely on one person to perform all the tasks required.

A TFI Operator doesn't simply treat this as a side hustle, they learn how to approach tax sales as a real business by staying organized, and creating something repeatable and scalable. This includes building workflows and learning how to delegate certain tasks effectively, including the strategic use of Virtual Assistants.

Virtual Assistants don't replace the investor, but they can free up time and focus on small tasks, such as finding online and in-person auctions, running comps, and building lists, just to name a few. This enables the investor to make more informed decisions, while also freeing up time for more in-depth research and due diligence.

Including the use of a virtual assistant allows the business to become a lot more sustainable, with the capability of producing long-term results.

If You Want To Go Further

This booklet was designed to introduce you to tax lien and tax deed investing and help you understand the opportunity. But as you've likely realized, the real questions don't appear until you start researching actual counties, with real lists and real properties.

The difference between investors who succeed and investors who stall is whether they have a structured system when they encounter obstacles along the way.

The Total Freedom Business was built as a deep dive that helps investors move beyond scattered information they find online to a structured system that can produce results. If you want to approach this business as a serious entrepreneur, with the necessary tools, workflow, and training to make informed decisions without years of trial and error, then the TFB is the perfect next step.

The program we have created is not the answer by itself, it is simply the training system that helps you think critically, evaluate responsibly, and execute like a TFI Operator.

Section 4 - Investors Using AI

Research Before Modern Tools

Not that long ago, tax lien and deed investing looked very different. Research was a lot slower, more manual, and far less forgiving. Information wasn't centralized, online access was limited, and consistency across counties was rare.

Property lists were often printed and mailed out weeks in advance, or only available in person at the county treasurer's office. In many areas, there was no downloadable file, no searchable database, and no guarantee the list you received was still accurate by the time it reached you. Investors frequently worked from information that was already outdated.

Even basic research meant hours on the phone. Investors would call county offices to check whether a property had redeemed, confirm auction rules, or clarify local terminology. It was common to be transferred from department to department just to get a single answer.

Mapping was another challenge. Before modern GIS systems, parcel numbers didn't tell you much on their own. Investors had to rely on paper maps, assessor books, or in-person visits to figure out where a property was actually located. Determining access, flood risks, or even whether a parcel was usable could require physical travel or a lot of back-and-forth correspondence.

Title research was just as time-consuming. Court records weren't digitized, so judgment searches meant pulling physical files, scanning microfilm, or waiting days (even weeks) for copies to arrive. The process was slow and methodical, and prone to delays.

Because of all this, research timelines stretched out considerably. Investors often spent weeks researching a small handful of properties. Scaling the business didn't mean working smarter, it meant working longer, traveling more, or hiring help just to keep up.

The investors who succeeded were persistent and organized. They did the work others didn't want to do. But even then, opportunities were missed simply because information moved too slowly. Investors made decisions with incomplete data, not by choice but by necessity.

As physical records moved online and mapping tools improved, research became faster and more accessible. The use of AI represents the next step in that progression, not by replacing due diligence, but by reducing the friction that used to define why this business was so challenging to begin with.

Understanding where the process came from helps explain where modern tools actually add value, and reveals how investors can now spend less time fighting logistics, and more time making better decisions.

Now Everything Has Changed

AI has dramatically changed how quickly investors can process information, although it hasn't changed the fundamentals of tax lien and deed investing. The core principles remain the same: sound due diligence, conservative assumptions, and personal accountability for every decision you make.

The use of AI tools won't simply remove risks, but we want to show how these tools can be used effectively, as they can cover large amounts of data and research information in a significantly shorter timeframe. And while the decision-making still comes down to you, AI tools are available to enable you to make more calculated, informed decisions.

Where AI Actually Helps

Tax lien and deed investing is an endeavour that's heavy on the research, with long lists, data sources that are often fragmented, and a wide variety of county terminology. A lot of an investor's time is spent organizing information before any real analysis even begins.

This is where AI can be most useful:

- Sorting and organizing large lists
- Speeding up early-stage research
- Clarifying unfamiliar terminology or procedures

For example, struck-off or over-the-counter lists can range from a few parcels to tens of thousands, and they change constantly as owners redeem. Before you can analyze anything, you need to narrow the field.

AI tools can help to do the following:

- Group properties by price range
- Flag parcels that fall outside your criteria
- Organize lists by geography, size, or assessed value

While this doesn't replace manual verification, it can dramatically shorten the time spent on first-pass filtering.

AI and Price-Based Filtering

When investing in tax deeds, prices certainly matter, but not always in the way new investors might expect.

Higher purchase prices often come with a higher potential upside, but that also means more exposure. One of the earliest decisions you should make is how you want to deploy your capital. Do you prefer investing across several smaller purchases, or focusing on one or two larger opportunities?

Using AI can help by quickly segmenting lists based on price thresholds you define. Instead of scanning thousands of entries by hand, you can narrow the list to properties that fit your strategy in minutes.

That being said, the price alone never tells the full story. A $1,000 deed might resell for $5,000, while a $10,000 deed could be worth $50,000 or more. In some cases, one larger deal can match the returns of several smaller ones, with far less time and effort involved.

It's key to remember that while AI helps with surface-level options, you as the investor still decide which ones deserve a closer look.

Understanding County Language and Lists

One challenge newer investors often underestimate is county terminology. If you're purchasing over the counter (meaning you're buying a tax lien or deed without attending an auction), you may need to clarify what you're asking for when speaking with county staff, because oftentimes the same list goes by a different name in a different county.

Using AI here can help by quickly summarizing:

- Common list names used nationwide
- County-specific terminology
- Typical redemption rules tied to each list

It's still key to remember that AI shouldn't replace direct communication. A simple explanation usually works best, for example:

"I'm looking for the list of properties that didn't sell at an auction and are now held by the county."

In most cases, that leads to terms like "lands available list," "struck-off list," "surplus list," or "over-the-counter list."

While AI is a useful tool that can prepare you for that conversation, the county itself must provide confirmation that you're speaking about the same thing.

Staying Current as Lists Change

Tax-delinquent property lists are constantly changing. In some counties, owners can redeem right up until an hour before the auction. It's common for 25–30% of a list to redeem the morning of the sale.

Researching as close to the auction date as possible helps avoid wasted effort, and AI tools can assist you by performing the following tasks:

- Comparing different versions of a list
- Highlighting removed or updated parcels
- Tracking changes over time

TIP: While AI serves as a great tool to help you compile an informed list, it's important to note that it's still your responsibility to keep it current by checking with the county.

What AI Should Not Be Used For

It's important to keep in mind that AI is not a replacement for:

- Title research
- Legal review
- On-the-ground verification
- Professional advice

Using AI as a tool to summarize, organize, and make suggestions can be helpful, but at times it can also provide incorrect information. Data may be outdated, assumptions can be flawed, and errors do still happen.

That's exactly why AI tools should be used early on in your workflow, and not in the final decision-making.

A simple rule of thumb:

If the consequence of being wrong is expensive, verify something manually.

A Balanced Approach

When used efficiently, AI can dramatically reduce the time between receiving a list and identifying properties that are worth looking into further. It's a tool that frees you from repetitive tasks so you can focus on higher-quality analysis and in-depth research.

The most effective investors treat AI the same way they treat any tool, as something useful, yet never a substitute for disciplined action. As AI continues to evolve, those who understand how to integrate it responsibly will have an advantage, placing it into their workflow and creating more efficient processes for each task.

What AI tools really change isn't what you invest in, but how you spend your time and attention. When routine sorting and surface-level research take less time, this creates more space to think critically. While AI might not make decisions easier, it has the potential to inspire us to ask more thoughtful and engaging questions.

Section 5: The Live Auction Experience

The Live Tax Auction Experience

For many investors, a live tax sale is their first real exposure to how this business operates in the real world. It's the place where in-depth research meets execution, and where it becomes obvious as to who has come fully prepared.

Live auctions can feel intimidating at first, especially because once the bidding starts, there's very little room to figure out anything that you haven't previously researched. However with the right expectations and preparation, they're also one of the best learning environments you'll encounter in tax lien and deed investing.

What To Expect at a Live Tax Sale

Live auctions vary widely by county, but most share a few common traits: they're public, they're fast-paced, and they reward people who show up prepared.

In some larger counties, multiple auctions may run at the same time in different locations around the courthouse. It's not unusual for several properties to be called simultaneously by different officials. This isn't something you should try to chase, it's something to plan around. You're there to bid on your properties, not everything that crosses the block.

In smaller counties, auctions may be held outside the courthouse steps or in a public room, sometimes without amplification. Announcements can be brief and easy to miss if you're distracted. If you're scrambling to check numbers, confirm details, or decide what to bid while the auction is already underway, you're already behind.

The key takeaway here is that live auctions don't reward improvisation, they reward preparation.

How to Prepare Before You Arrive

By your second or third auction, you should arrive with a short, focused list of properties you've already performed in-depth researched on. A good range is 10–20 properties, depending on the size of the auction, as well as your experience level.

For each property you plan to bid on, you should already know:

- Opening bid or starting amount
- A realistic estimate of market value
- Your maximum bid (and why)
- How strongly you want the property
- Key physical details (lot size, access, condition, location)

All of this should be decided before auction day. The auction is not the place to reassess value or adjust strategy. Your job on auction day is simply to execute decisions you've already made calmly and consistently.

Staying Organized on Auction Day

Live auctions move quickly, and that means your mental bandwidth will be limited. Anything you can decide in advance will free up where you need to pay attention in the moment.

It's key to bring printed property sheets or a clearly organized digital list that includes parcel numbers, bid limits, and any crucial notes. You definitely want to avoid relying on your memory, as even experienced investors miss details with pressure and amount of noise in the room.

Make sure to arrive early, get settled, and identify where the bidding will take place. If there are multiple sale points, decide in advance which one matters to you the most, and focus on that one only. Trying to monitor absolutely everything usually leads to missed bids or rushed decisions.

Viewing Property and Route Planning

If you're viewing properties in person before the auction, being efficient with your route planning matters. Today, most investors rely on modern navigation tools like Google Maps, Apple Maps, or dedicated GPS devices that support multi-stop route optimization.

Simply plan your property visits ahead of time, so that you're not zigzagging across town or wasting energy re-routing on the fly. It's helpful to group properties geographically, and allowing extra time for access issues. It's also safe to assume you won't be able to see everything.

Taking the time to look closely at a handful of properties is far more valuable than trying to glance at dozens and missing important details.

Common Mistakes to Avoid

Live auctions expose a few common patterns, such as:

- Bidding without a firm maximum
- Chasing properties you didn't research
- Letting urgency override discernment
- Feeling pressure to "come home with something"

None of these patterns actually improve an investor's outcomes. In fact, many successful investors attend auctions without bidding at all. This is because every auction adds context, increases confidence, and helps investors recognize patterns, all of which provide a more thoughtful and discerning approach when it comes to the next auction.

A live auction includes both execution and education, both of which add value for an investor's knowledge and skillset.

Why Live Auctions Still Matter

Even as online auctions become more common, live auctions offer something that digital platforms can't: firsthand exposure to how counties operate, how rules are enforced, and how other investors behave under pressure.

Live auctions sharpen an investor's discipline, as well as their preparation skills. They also reinforce an important lesson early in this business, which is that the best deals are made before the auction ever starts.

In the next section, we'll look at how online tax auctions work, how they differ from live sales, and what changes when bidding moves to a screen.

Section 6: Online Tax Sales

The Online Tax Auction

Online tax auctions have made tax lien and deed investing far more accessible, especially for investors who can't easily travel or who want exposure to multiple counties at once. While the fundamentals of the investment itself remain the same, online tax auctions have changed both where and how an investor can bid.

A number of years ago, participating in any auction required showing up at a courthouse in person. Today, many counties allow you to research, register, bid, and manage purchases entirely online through approved auction platforms. That convenience has opened the door to investors both domestically and internationally, but it's important to note that while bidding has become much easier, this means that preparation and due diligence is even more crucial for each investor.

How Online Tax Auctions Work

Most online auctions are run through third-party platforms contracted by counties.

While each platform has its own interface, the structure is generally the same:

- You register and verify your identity in advance
- Some counties require a deposit or banking setup
- Auctions run for a defined period or close at a scheduled time
- Bidding follows county-specific rules
- Payment is due immediately or within a short window after winning

TIP: Always review the county's auction instructions carefully before bidding, as the county sets the rules, and not the platform itself.

Understanding the Bidding Process

One key difference between online and live auctions that applies especially to tax liens is how bidding works. In many lien states, you're not bidding the price up, you're actually bidding the return down.

Example: In Arizona, a tax lien might start at 16%. One bidder offers 15%, another offers 14%, and bidding continues downward until no one is willing to accept less. The investor who accepts the lowest rate wins the lien.

This structure rewards investors who understand their numbers. Some experienced buyers are comfortable with 2–5% returns because they deploy their capital at scale, or have specific strategies. Many newer investors would need higher returns to justify the risk and the effort. That's why due diligence matters even more in online auctions, because once you win, the return is locked in.

Registering for Online Auctions

To register for most online tax auctions, you'll need one of the following:

- Social Security Number (SSN) – for U.S. individuals
- Individual Taxpayer Identification Number (ITIN) – for non-U.S. investors
- Employer Identification Number (EIN) – if investing through an entity

If you're just starting, it's best not to overcomplicate this step. You can begin as an individual and move to an entity later if it makes sense. The key here is being properly registered before bidding opens.

What to Confirm Before You Bid

Online auctions move both quietly and quickly, with the most common mistakes happening before the first bid is placed.

Before bidding either online or live, make sure you've done the following:

1. Choose your location intentionally.
2. Decide where you want to invest and eliminate areas that don't fit your criteria. If you're bidding online, think through how you'll research properties remotely, through photos, mapping tools, local contacts, or third-party inspections.
3. Call the county to narrow down your list.
4. Confirm details such as taxes owed, assessed value, property type, acreage, zoning, and any environmental restrictions. Counties are still the best source for clarification.
5. Research as close to the auction date as possible.
7. Many properties redeem right up until the sale, so researching one or two days before bidding helps to avoid wasted time and effort.
8. Understand prior liens and additional taxes for any properties you're interested in.

9. In some states, certain liens survive the tax sale, so always verify this with the county and budget for the auction conservatively.
10. Set your numbers in advance.
11. Know how much you're willing to spend, your minimum acceptable return, and any additional fees or foreclosure costs. If any of the numbers don't work, then don't bid.
12. Confirm all payment procedures.
13. Some platforms require an ACH withdrawal, while others accept wire transfers or certified funds. If banking setup is required, handle it well before auction day.

Online Lists Change Constantly

Online lists are constantly changing as properties are redeemed while the counties update information right up to the close of bidding. While technology makes access easier, it doesn't always guarantee accuracy.

It's still your responsibility to:

- Verify availability near to the auction closing
- Confirm the redemption status with the county
- Meet all payment deadlines

It's key to remember that online access still requires a level of accountability, even if technology has made it a lot more efficient and easier to place bids from the comfort of your own home.

A Practical Perspective

Online tax auctions can be powerful tools, as they allow you to participate in markets you couldn't otherwise reach, as well as manage multiple opportunities efficiently. But it's important to remember that convenience cuts both ways. It's easy to participate, but it's also easy to move too fast.

The most effective investors treat online auctions with the same level of discipline they apply to live sales. Deep research and due diligence is still crucial before the bidding opens.

In the pages that follow, you'll find state-by-state summaries that outline which states offer online auctions, how bidding generally works, and what to pay attention to as you decide where to focus.

Arizona

Arizona is one of the more established tax lien states and remains popular with investors because of its structured process and clearly defined rules.

- Interest Rate: Liens start at 16%, bid down competitively at auction
- Redemption Period: 3 years
- Sale Type: Tax Lien Certificates (unsold tax liens may move to a tax deed auction)

Noteworthy Details:

Arizona uses a bid-down interest system, meaning investors compete by accepting progressively lower returns. In larger counties, rates are frequently driven into the single digits due to high participation levels.

Unlike deed states, Arizona does not transfer ownership at the initial sale. If a lien goes unredeemed, the investor must initiate judicial foreclosure to obtain the property, which adds time and legal costs. For that reason, Arizona is generally approached as a lien-return state rather than a fast path to acquiring property.

Best Suited For:

Arizona is well suited for investors who are comfortable with online, bid-down competition and who are primarily seeking structured lien returns rather than immediate ownership. It tends to favour disciplined bidders who set firm minimum return thresholds, and are prepared for rates to drop in competitive counties. Those deploying moderate to larger amounts of capital often find Arizona to be an attractive state for investing, especially when they approach the market with patience and careful selection.

Notable Counties:

Maricopa County - One of the most active online tax lien markets in the state. Maricopa conducts its sales through an approved online auction platform with a structured bid-down interest system. High volume and strong competition make it a focal point for lien investors.

Yavapai County - A smaller but consistently active online lien venue. Yavapai's online sales tend to draw less competition than Maricopa, offering opportunities for investors who prefer less crowded bidding environments.

Colorado

Colorado operates under a lien-to-deed system, where investors purchase tax lien certificates that can eventually lead to a tax deed if the taxes remain unpaid. While the statutory return is tied to the federal prime rate, the bidding process and allocation methods can vary by county, which makes Colorado structurally different from many traditional bid-down interest states.

- Interest Rate: 9% above the federal discount rate (prime), set annually in September
- Redemption Period: 3 years
- Sale Type: Tax Lien Certificates only

Noteworthy Details:

Colorado does not use a traditional bid-down interest system. Instead, it operates under two primary methods:

- Rotational (Round Robin) Allocation: For smaller liens, certificates are often assigned in a rotating or random order among bidders willing to accept the statutory rate.
- Premium Bidding: For more competitive liens, investors may bid a premium above the lien amount.

Any premium paid does not earn interest and is not returned upon redemption, which means that overbidding directly reduces your effective return. Also most counties hold their sales in October.

Best Suited For:

Colorado is well suited for investors who prefer a defined statutory rate rather than bid-down competition and who carefully manage premium exposure. It favours disciplined investors focused on structured lien income rather than aggressive bidding strategies.

Notable Counties:

Denver County - Denver's online tax lien auctions are regularly accessible and attract consistent participation. As a larger metro market, it often sees competitive bidding on higher-value liens.

Weld County - Weld's online auctions are well-established and draw steady volume. The county's activity sits between urban intensity and suburban balance, making it a useful addition for investors watching multiple Colorado markets.

Florida

Florida is one of the most active tax lien states in the country, with many counties hosting well-attended online certificate auctions each year. The state operates on a lien-to-deed system, meaning investors first purchase tax lien certificates, and if the taxes are not redeemed, the certificate holder can later initiate the tax deed process.

- Interest Rate: Maximum 18%, bid down competitively
- Redemption Period: 2 years
- Sale Type: Tax Liens and Tax Deeds

Noteworthy Details:

Florida uses a bid-down interest system, allowing investors to bid from 18% down to as low as 0.25%. However, if a lien is awarded at 0.25%, the certificate automatically earns a minimum return of 5% upon redemption. This minimum-interest feature is unique to Florida.

Because of this structure, as well as the state's size and accessibility, the competition can be fairly strong, especially in larger counties. Most counties will require a deposit prior to bidding, and requirements vary by county.

It's also key to note that if a lien goes unredeemed after two years, investors may apply for a tax deed sale, creating a potential path to ownership.

Best Suited For:

Florida is well suited for investors that are comfortable with aggressive bid-down environments, and who are seeking shorter redemption timelines. It can appeal to both lien-focused investors targeting the 5% minimum safety net, and those interested in the potential transition to deed sales if the liens go unredeemed.

Notable Counties:

Miami-Dade County - One of the most active online tax deed markets in Florida. Certificates often convert to deed sale opportunities if liens go unredeemed, and the online process is well developed and widely accessed.

Orange County - Central Florida's primary online tax deed venue (Orlando area). Orange County uses a web-based system for listing sales and managing bids, and it consistently draws a steady stream of investors.

Indiana

Indiana is a lien state with both traditional tax lien sales and Commissioner's Certificate sales, which create a distinct secondary opportunity structure. Several counties now conduct their sales online.

- Interest Rate: Up to 10% per annum (statutory), plus eligible costs
- Redemption Period: 1 year (standard sale); 120 days for Commissioner's Sales
- Sale Type: Tax Lien Certificates (Standard and Commissioner)

Noteworthy Details:

Indiana's traditional tax sale awards certificates at the statutory rate, and investors may recover certain allowable costs if the lien redeems.

What makes Indiana unique is the Commissioner's Certificate Sale, which occurs after properties fail to sell at the original tax sale. In these sales:

- A minimum bid is set, often below the original lien amount.
- The amount you bid becomes the actual certificate value (not a premium).
- The redemption period is shortened to 120 days.

This compressed redemption window can create faster capital turnover but requires careful due diligence, as properties offered at this stage may carry higher risk.

Best Suited For:

Indiana is well suited for investors who prefer a defined statutory structure and are interested in shorter redemption timelines through Commissioner's Sales. It favours disciplined buyers who are comfortable analyzing secondary-sale properties, and factoring in allowable costs (and timelines) when calculating an effective return.

Notable Counties:

Marion County - Conducts online tax sales through a contracted auction platform. As one of the state's largest counties, its online activity tends to draw reliable participation.

Vanderburgh County - Known for online Commissioner's Certificate sales, Vanderburgh's auctions have been hosted on approved platforms and draw regular investor participation, especially for its secondary sales.

Louisiana

Louisiana conducts what are commonly called Tax Sales (often referred to as Tax Title Sales). While structurally similar to lien states, the system includes layered statutory penalties and interest that make it slightly more complex than traditional bid-down states. Many parishes now conduct these sales online.

- Interest Rate: Bid-down format + 1% per month (12% annually)
- Redemption Period: 3 years
- Sale Type: Tax sale (Tax Title Certificate)

Noteworthy Details:

Louisiana combines a bid-down interest structure with statutory penalties. In addition to the interest rate determined at auction:

- A 5% penalty applies to the lien amount.
- Interest accrues at 1% per month (12% annually).
- If you pay subsequent taxes, those amounts earn 1% per month, plus an additional 5% penalty per full year on those payments.

On paper, full-term returns can look strong. In reality, many properties redeem well before the three-year mark, so returns should be modelled conservatively, especially when factoring in early redemptions.

Best Suited For:

Louisiana is well suited for investors who are comfortable tracking layered statutory returns and managing subsequent tax payments over a multi-year redemption period. It favours organized investors who can model different redemption timelines rather than relying on maximum-term projections.

Notable Counties:

East Baton Rouge Parish - Conducts consistent online tax sales with steady inventory and reliable digital bidding infrastructure.

Orleans Parish (New Orleans) - High visibility and demand. Online sales are accessible, but competition can be stronger due to market appeal.

Maryland

Maryland is a lien state with a structured statutory system and strong municipal-level involvement. Many counties conduct their tax lien sales online, though bidding procedures and interest structures can vary by county. Maryland is known for its relatively higher statutory interest rates compared to many other lien states.

- Interest Rate: Up to 20% annually (varies by county; some municipalities differ)
- Redemption Period: Generally 6 months (extensions depend on foreclosure timeline)
- Sale Type: Tax Lien Certificates

Noteworthy Details:

Maryland operates under a statutory interest system, but bidding formats vary by county. In many cases, the interest rate is fixed and investors compete through premium bidding rather than bidding down the rate.

Some key structural points are:

- Interest rates are often set by statute (commonly up to 20%).
- Some counties use premium bidding, meaning you may pay more than the lien amount to win.
- Premiums are typically not refunded and do not earn interest.
- Foreclosure is judicial and must be initiated after the redemption period expires.

Because foreclosure requires court involvement, investors should be prepared for additional legal steps and costs if a lien does not redeem.

Best Suited For:

Maryland is well suited for investors who are comfortable with premium bidding and judicial foreclosure processes. It favors disciplined buyers who carefully evaluate premium exposure and understand how legal timelines affect capital deployment.

Notable Counties:

Baltimore City - Conducts online tax lien sales with consistent volume and structured bidding, has a strong participation and a competitive environment.

Montgomery County – High-value market with online tax sales; competition can be stronger due to property values and proximity to Washington, D.C.

New Jersey

New Jersey is a lien state with one of the more investor-friendly statutory interest structures in the country. Tax lien sales are conducted at the municipal level, and many municipalities now offer online bidding through approved auction platforms. The structure includes both bid-down interest and a unique premium system.

- Interest Rate: Up to 18% annually (bid down)
- Redemption Period: 2 years (standard)
- Sale Type: Tax Lien Certificates

Noteworthy Details:

New Jersey uses a bid-down interest format, starting at 18% and bidding downward. However, once bidding reaches 0%, investors begin bidding a premium.

Some key structural points are:

- Interest is capped at 18% per year.
- Once bidding reaches 0%, investors compete by offering a cash premium.
- The premium does not earn interest.
- Premiums may be forfeited if the lien redeems within a specified timeframe (commonly within 5 years).

Because of the premium structure, it's important that investors stay disciplined throughout the bidding process to avoid overpaying on premiums.

Best Suited For:

New Jersey is best suited for investors who understand premium exposure and are comfortable modelling effective yield rather than focusing only on the statutory rate. It favours patient investors who are willing to navigate judicial foreclosure timelines if a property does not redeem.

Notable Counties:

Essex County (Newark area) - Essex municipalities regularly conduct online lien sales and tend to attract strong bidding activity. As an urban market with dense property inventory, competition can be active, especially on higher-value liens.

Bergen County - Bergen's municipal sales are well participated in and often reflect higher property values. Investors should expect steady competition, particularly in desirable suburban areas.

Final Thoughts

Online tax sales have quietly opened a door that didn't exist twenty years ago. You no longer have to live near a courthouse or book flights just to participate. With the right preparation and discipline, you can sit at your desk and successfully compete in markets across the country.

If this chapter sparked your interest, start off simple. We recommend choosing one state that feels understandable to you, and spending some time to get comfortable with its structure. Most online sales are hosted through platforms like RealAuction, Grant Street Group, or GovEase, and once you've navigated one sale cycle, the process becomes far less intimidating than it first appears.

Online bidding might seem a little overwhelming at first, but it's all about gradually building a familiarity with the various platforms and tools at your disposal, so you can approach tax sales with confidence, while staying disciplined throughout the process.

It may not feel comfortable the first time you participate, and that's totally normal. Like any skill in this business, it improves with repetition. Each auction, whether it's online or in person, will present new challenges and lessons, so it's key to take each one as an opportunity to grow and develop your skillset. The most successful investors aren't attached to any particular outcome, instead they have learned to treat each auction and each sale as a part of their education.

FREE GIFT: Updated Online Auction Calendar

Auction dates, platforms, and registration deadlines change every year. The state breakdowns in this book give you the foundation, but you'll want current dates before you bid. In the link below is a free, regularly updated calendar of online tax lien and deed auctions organized by state. Section 7: Frequently Asked Questions

Over the years, we've been asked thousands of questions about tax liens, tax deeds, auctions, and where to begin. This chapter pulls together the most common questions in one place. Think of it as a reference section you can return to whenever something feels unclear or if you need a quick refresher. If you're wondering about a particular process, starting strategy, or a simple definition, the answer can likely be found in the pages that follow.

What is a tax deed?

A tax deed is one of the two primary ways counties handle unpaid property taxes. In a tax deed state, if the owner does not pay the delinquent taxes within the allowed timeframe, the county sells the property itself at a public auction.

The starting bid is typically the amount of back taxes, interest, penalties, and sale costs owed. Investors bid on the property, and the highest bidder receives a deed, subject to that state's specific rules and procedures.

If a property does not sell at auction, it may become available for purchase directly from the county. These are often referred to as over-the-counter (OTC) deeds. In those cases, there is usually no competitive bidding, and the purchase price is set by the county.

In most deed states, tax deed sales eliminate junior liens, and mortgages are typically wiped out because property taxes are superior. However, the exact outcome depends on state law, so due diligence is still essential before purchasing.

What is a tax lien certificate?

A tax lien certificate is created when a property owner doesn't pay their property taxes. In many states, instead of selling the property right away, the county sells the tax debt to investors. When you buy a tax lien certificate, you're not buying the house, you're paying the owner's overdue taxes for them.

In return, the owner must pay you back the amount you paid plus interest, which is set by state law. If they don't repay within the allowed redemption period, you may have the right to start the foreclosure process and potentially take ownership of the property. It's essentially a government-backed debt that's secured by real estate, but like any investment, it requires careful research and a clear understanding of the rules in that state.

For example, in Arizona the interest rate can start at 16% (and is bid down at auction). So if you paid $10,000 in back taxes and the lien redeemed at 16%, you would receive your $10,000 back plus $1,600 in interest. If the homeowner doesn't repay within the redemption period, you may have the right to begin foreclosure, depending on that state's laws.

What is a Pre Foreclosure?

A pre-foreclosure is the early stage of foreclosure. It begins when a homeowner falls behind on their mortgage payments and the lender starts the legal process to take the property back. At this point, the homeowner still owns the home, but they're under pressure to catch up on payments or resolve the debt before the foreclosure is completed.

Some investors choose to reach out during this stage to see if the homeowner wants help selling the property before it goes to auction. The goal isn't to "take advantage" of someone in a tough situation, it's to provide an option. That might mean buying the property at a discount, helping the owner avoid a foreclosure on their record, and giving them time or resources to transition. Pre-foreclosures can create opportunity, but they require sensitivity, clear communication, and a strong understanding of the legal process in your state.

How do I get started, and how much money do I need?

One of the most attractive parts of tax lien and deed investing is the range of entry points. You don't need hundreds of thousands of dollars to begin. In some counties, smaller liens or low-value properties can be purchased for relatively modest amounts.

That being said, the rare situations where properties have been acquired for very small sums are the exception. A more practical starting point for most investors is having a few thousand dollars available so that you can cover the lien or deed purchase, plus any related costs. The key isn't how much you start with, it's that you start with money you can afford to invest, do your due diligence carefully, and build from there.

I've had setbacks and can't travel right now. How can I get started from home?

If travel isn't an option, it's best to start local. Focus on the county or state you live in and learn it well. Many areas now offer online tax lien or tax deed auctions, which allows you to participate without leaving home. If you're in a deed state, you may also consider working with someone locally who can view properties for you before the sale.

If you have limited funds, in-depth research is more important than being able to travel long distances. Get to know your local market, its property values, neighbourhoods, zoning, and how your county runs its sales. The more familiar you are with your area, the easier it becomes to recognize a solid opportunity when it appears. You don't need to be everywhere at once, you just need to understand one market well enough to move forward confidently.

What skills are needed to become successful with tax liens?

The most important skill isn't technical, it's actually consistency. Tax lien investing rewards people who take steady action, even when the progress feels slow at first. That might mean calling counties, reviewing property lists, or spending time understanding how one state runs its sales. Remember that small steps taken regularly add up.

You don't need to know everything on day one. What matters is building momentum and staying disciplined. This isn't a get-rich-quick strategy, it's a process that rewards patience, due diligence, and consistent follow-through. The investors who succeed are the ones who keep showing up, learning from each sale, and improving their decisions over time.

How do you push yourself to start and move past the doubt holding you back?

Doubt is definitely normal, especially when you're trying something new. What makes it harder is when the people around you don't understand what you're doing. Sometimes that shows up as teasing, skepticism, or subtle discouragement. Most of the time, it's not malicious, it's simply unfamiliar to them.

The key is to stay focused on your own direction. Not everyone needs to understand your goals for them to be valid. If you believe this is worth exploring, take small, consistent steps forward. Keep learning, track your progress, and celebrate the small wins. Your confidence will build as you keep taking action.

What are the five best cities to buy tax deeds?

There isn't a single "best" city, as it depends on your budget, risk tolerance, and how competitive you're willing to be. Larger metro areas like parts of Texas (for example, the Houston area), Atlanta, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, or Seattle can offer strong opportunities because of factors like population growth and higher property values. When you buy well in a strong market, the resale demand tends to be more predictable.

That being said, bigger cities usually mean more competition and higher prices. Smaller or secondary markets can sometimes offer better entry points with less bidding pressure. Instead of chasing the “best” city, I’d recommend focusing on learning one market thoroughly, understanding its auction process, property values, and competition level. The most viable city to consider as an investor is the city that you understand well enough to bid with confidence.

Where can I sell land?

A more appropriate question would actually be, how can I sell land? The fundamentals are simple: put the property in front of the people who are most likely to want it.

It’s best to start with free or low-cost options, like listing it on platforms such as Facebook Marketplace, Craigslist (where active), or other local real estate sites. Be sure to post clear photos, accurate details, and a realistic price. If the land is buildable or has a specific use (recreational, agricultural, infill lot), make sure to highlight that clearly.

One of the most effective strategies (especially for vacant land) is to contact the neighbouring property owners. You can acquire their mailing information from county records and send a short letter, informing them about the property that is available. Neighbours will often have the strongest interest because it expands their footprint or protects their view.

I would also recommend creating a short walk-through video using your phone. Show the property, describe its access points, any nearby development, as well as potential uses. This builds trust and gives buyers a clearer picture than simply posting photos by themselves. It provides context and gives those interested a much clearer picture of what they’re looking at.

Finally, building relationships with local real estate agents and investors is a great strategy, because the more exposure your property has, the faster you’ll find the right buyer.

How do I register with the county? Do I need to register with every county?

In most states, registration is handled at the county level. This means that if you plan to bid in multiple counties, you'll usually need to register with each one separately. The process is often done online and may require identification, tax information (such as an SSN, ITIN, or EIN), and sometimes a refundable deposit.

The best approach is to simply check the county's official website or call the tax collector or treasurer's office directly. Each county sets its own rules and deadlines, so confirm the requirements well before the sale date.

Can you do this with less than a couple thousand dollars? Do you have to travel? Where should you start with limited funds?

Yes, you can start with limited capital, but you need to be realistic about costs. Beyond the lien or deed purchase, there may be fees, recording costs, and in some cases legal expenses. If your budget is tight, I would focus on keeping overhead costs low, which usually means starting close to home and avoiding unnecessary travel.

Many counties now offer online tax lien or tax deed auctions, so you don't always need to attend in person. If travel isn't practical, look for online sales or over-the-counter (OTC) opportunities where properties didn't sell at auction. With limited funds, depth matters more than distance. If you can learn one county really well by understand its pricing and processes, that's a great starting point to build on and expand where you choose to invest.

How much honestly do you feel you need financially to start in this business?

You don't need a fortune to begin, but you do need enough to participate responsibly. In some counties, smaller liens or lower-value properties can be purchased for a few hundred dollars. Realistically, having at least $500–$2,000 available gives you room to cover the purchase and any related costs without putting yourself in a tight position.

One of the advantages of tax liens and deeds is that the process is structured and handled by the county, so this means you're bidding at a public sale with clearly defined rules, not negotiating directly with sellers. Even though it's still considered investing, certain barriers are lowered compared to traditional real estate. It's best to start with money you can afford to commit, focus on learning the process well, and build gradually from there.

Some counties require large deposits just to bid - what if I don't have that kind of money?

This is true, some counties do require significant deposits to participate in their auctions. That deposit is usually refundable if you don't win anything, but it still means you need available capital up front. Larger counties often use higher deposits to reduce non-serious bidders and manage competition.

If that deposit stretches your budget, you do have a few options. Firstly, look for counties with lower deposit requirements or online sales that have smaller entry thresholds. Not every market requires $1,500 or $5,000 to register, so it's best to start where your capital allows you to participate comfortably.

Another approach is to build up gradually. Begin in smaller markets, gain experience, and increase your capital base before stepping into more competitive auctions. In some states, auctions require only a percentage down initially, with the balance due later, however, that still requires planning and confirmed access to funds.

The key is this: never stretch beyond your comfort level just to enter a specific sale. There will always be another auction, so choose the one that fits your current financial position and grow from there.

What's the best way to go through a county list to find residential property?

The simplest way is to organize the list into a spreadsheet so you can sort it properly. Some counties provide downloadable spreadsheets, but many don't, which means you may need to manually input the data. It takes time, but it gives you control.

Start by sorting properties by type (residential, vacant land, commercial). Once you isolate the residential properties, sort again by assessed value and then by opening bid or taxes owed. When you can see higher assessed values paired with lower starting bids, those entries naturally rise to the top for closer review.

This part isn't the most glamorous, but it's very useful for keeping everything organized. Being able to filter and sort the data yourself can help turn a long, overwhelming county list into a manageable set of real opportunities.

What are the main risks at an auction, and how can you manage them?

The biggest risk at a tax deed auction is definitely incomplete research. One common mistake is relying solely on online tools like Google Maps or satellite images. While they can be helpful for preliminary screening, they don't always show a the current conditions. A property that appears to have a home on it could have been damaged, demolished, or significantly altered since the pictures were taken. If possible, doing an in-person inspection (or having someone view the property for you) would likely reduce that risk.

Other risks include overbidding, missing title issues, or misunderstanding local rules. These can all be managed through careful due diligence, which includes the following: confirm parcel numbers, review county records, understand lien priority, and set a strict maximum bid before the auction begins.

With tax liens, the risk profile is slightly different. Since you're purchasing the tax debt rather than the property itself (and because most liens get redeemed), your exposure is often smaller. It's still key to do in-depth research before placing any bids, because the more thorough your preparation is, the fewer surprises you'll face after the sale.

Do inexpensive tax deeds still exist? Can you really find deals under $1,000?

Yes, lower-priced tax deeds do still exist, but they're not everywhere, and they're not automatic. Smaller parcels, rural land, or properties in less competitive counties can sometimes sell for under $1,000. These opportunities will usually show up where competition is lighter and the property values are modest.

That being said, it's certainly not luck. It comes down to research. Counties hold sales every year across the country, and prices often reflect local demand. In competitive metro areas, entry prices tend to be higher on average. Whereas in quieter markets, you may find lower-cost opportunities, but you still need to carefully evaluate the location, access, and resale potential.

The key takeaway here is that while inexpensive deeds exist, they're often the result of focused research and disciplined bidding, rather than by chance.

I joined a foreclosure listing site (foreclosehouston.com) and didn't see any liens - where do I find them?

In Texas, you generally won't see tax liens listed the way you would in lien states, because Texas is primarily a tax deed state. Counties sell the property itself at auction, and not lien certificates. So if you're looking for liens specifically, that's why you may not see them.

Websites that track upcoming tax sales can be helpful for identifying properties headed to auction, but they don't replace county records. For accurate information that includes ownership, liens, and sale rules, you'll need to review county postings and, in some cases, conduct title research through the county clerk's office or a title company.

Also it's key to remember that while Texas tax deeds typically wipe out junior liens, Texas does have a redemption period after the sale. Understanding those rules is critical before bidding. Always verify details directly with the county, since procedures can vary.

How do you estimate repairs and determine after-repair value (ARV)?

Estimating repairs and ARV comes down to both research and relationships. Start by looking at what similar properties in the area have actually sold for, not just what they're listed at. Comparable sales (comps) give you the clearest picture of true market value. Many investors will ask a local real estate agent for recent sold data, or request a Broker Price Opinion (BPO) to get a realistic range.

For repairs, walk through the property with a contractor if possible and ask for a written estimate. If that's not feasible, use rule-of-thumb pricing and budget toward the conservative side. When it comes to agents, I'd suggest being straightforward. Let them know you're evaluating a property and want their opinion on resale value. Even if they're not guaranteed the listing, many agents are willing to provide insight in exchange for the possibility of future business.

The key is to combine hard numbers (sold comps and repair estimates) with conservative assumptions. Overestimating repairs and underestimating resale value is far safer than the reverse.

How do I flip land for a quick profit?

Flipping land starts with positioning, so you need to clearly communicate why the property is valuable to the next buyer. What that means is highlighting access, zoning, utilities, nearby development, and potential uses, whether that's building a home, holding as an investment, or recreational use.

I would also recommend listing the property on platforms like Facebook Marketplace, land-specific websites, and other online marketplaces. Make sure to include clear photos, parcel details, maps, and a short walk-through video whenever possible. The more clearly you show what the property offers, the easier it is for a buyer to say yes. It's also key to price your offer realistically. If your goal is a quick flip, the property needs to stand out as a deal.

How can I hire someone in the Philippines (or overseas) to help?

If you're looking to outsource administrative tasks, platforms like OnlineJobs.ph, Upwork, or similar freelance marketplaces (Manilla Craigslist) are common starting points. These platforms allow you to review profiles, experience, and client feedback before hiring.

When hiring someone overseas, I would recommend starting small. Assign clearly defined tasks, communicate your expectations upfront, and build the relationship gradually. A reliable assistant can help with research, data entry, or marketing tasks, but providing clarity and ensuring a healthy working relationship should come first. It's important to build structure and trust before you scale your business.

Property lien research on every property sounds expensive. How can I do this without spending a fortune?

Title research can become quite expensive if you order a full professional title report on every property before bidding. Most investors don't do that at the screening stage. Instead, they start with free or low-cost public resources. County property appraiser websites, clerk of court records, tax collector sites, and GIS mapping tools often provide ownership history, assessed value, legal descriptions, and recorded liens.

You can also use platforms like Zillow or other listing sites like AreaVibes.com to get a sense of neighbourhood value. Keep in mind that these are only supplemental tools, and not substitutes for county records. If you're scaling and reviewing larger lists, you may eventually choose to outsource data collection or build a small team to help with research.

The key is to match the depth of your research to the size of your investment. For smaller tax liens, many investors rely heavily on public records and conservative bidding. For larger purchases or deed sales, a more in-depth title review may be worth the cost. It's important to keep in mind that you want to spend money intelligently and in proportion to the risk involved, rather than eliminating research expenses entirely just to cut costs.

Do you have to pay the taxes on a property after you buy the tax lien?

It depends on the state, but in many lien states you'll have the option to pay the subsequent (future) taxes if the owner continues not to pay. This is usually called paying "subsequent taxes."

Here's why that matters:

Let's say you buy the Year 1 tax lien. The homeowner doesn't pay again the following year, so Year 2 taxes go to sale. If you don't step in, another investor can buy that second lien. If the property eventually goes to foreclosure, you would have to pay off that second investor (plus their interest) before taking clear title. If you instead exercise your right to pay the subsequent taxes yourself, you stack those liens under your name. That keeps you in first position and simplifies things if you ever need to foreclose.

So while you're not automatically required to keep paying future taxes, it often makes sense strategically if the property supports it.

How do you determine your maximum bid on a tax deed?

Before you ever show up to bid, I would highly recommend already knowing your number, even if it's an estimate. That number comes from working backward, rather than from heightened emotion at the auction.

Start by estimating the property's after-repair value (ARV) using sold comps (not asking prices). County assessed values can give you a rough baseline, and sites like Zillow or Redfin can help, but what really matters is what similar properties have actually sold for. Calling a local agent and asking, "What have comparable 3-bed, 2-baths in this area sold for recently?" is often one of the fastest ways to get clarity.

From there, subtract:

- Estimated repair costs
- Holding costs (taxes, utilities, insurance)
- Closing and resale costs
- A healthy profit margin

What's left is your maximum bid.

The key here is having discipline. Considering how fast auctions are, it's easy to get caught up in the moment. But if you've done your due diligence properly, your max bid shouldn't change just because someone else keeps bidding.

How do I flip a property once I buy it over-the-counter?

Once you've secured an over-the-counter property, the focus shifts to one thing: selling it properly.

Start by choosing your strategy. Are you pricing it for a quick cash flip? Listing it at market value with an agent? Offering owner financing? Your exit plan should guide everything, including the price, marketing, and timeline.

Using a local real estate agent can be a smart move, especially for higher-value properties, because they know the comps, they understand buyer behaviour in that area, and they can get exposure quickly. But don't rely on just one channel, use the free platforms as well, such as:

- Facebook Marketplace
- Craigslist
- Local buy/sell groups
- Signs (where permitted)
- Direct mail to neighbouring property owners

Now let's talk about something most investors overlook, which is your buyers list. This makes flipping much easier because you're not scrambling after you purchase; you already know who buys in that area. One simple way to start building one is by running what's sometimes called a "phantom ad."

For example:

"Investment properties available. Send a message with what you're looking for." You're not necessarily selling anything yet, instead you're collecting interested buyers and organizing them by criteria (land, rentals, fix-and-flips, price range, etc.). Over time, that list becomes one of your most valuable assets.

One important reminder, especially if you're working with liens rather than deeds – Only the first tax lien holder has the right to foreclose. Think of it like a pyramid. The first position controls the foreclosure process. If you buy a second or third-year lien, the first lien holder can foreclose and simply pay you out your principal plus the interest. That's okay if you're purely chasing interest, but if your strategy involves acquiring actual property, then your lien position matters.

What are your live auction trips and when is the next one?

Every 2-3 months, we invite a small group of students from our TFB program to join us at a live tax sale, which is typically in Houston, Texas. It's a full weekend focused on walking through the entire process in real time.

Before the auction, we review each student's research together. We refine max bids, pressure-test assumptions, and look at properties that stand out. We'll often drive 40-70 properties, discussing neighborhood dynamics, potential rehab costs, resale strategy, and what to watch for that you simply can't see online.

During the auction itself, students get to experience the pace, the competition, and the decision-making that happens on the ground. There's never pressure to bid, as the priority is learning how to stay disciplined, stick to your numbers, and recognize when a deal no longer makes sense.

These trips are less about winning a property and more about building judgment and the skillset a student would need to attend a live auction by themselves. The goal is to leave with more clarity, confidence, and a much deeper understanding of how live auctions actually work.

For upcoming dates, we announce them directly to TFB students when registration opens, and they'll be available to see on our website – <https://taxlienschool.com/>

How do I purchase tax deeds if I'm based in Canada?

As a Canadian myself, I can answer this practically – if you want to buy tax deeds, you should strongly consider going in person, especially in the beginning.

With tax deeds, you're potentially taking ownership of the property. That means it's important for you to see it in person and understand the area. Photos and Google Maps are helpful, but they're not a replacement for boots on the ground. Things like fires, demolitions, and access issues aren't always obvious online, so it's best to see the property with your own eyes.

There is a more advanced approach where you have someone local inspect properties and even bid on your behalf. But this only works if it's someone you know and trust. You're wiring funds and relying on their judgment, so the relationship really matters.

When I was starting out, I focused on states close to the Canadian border to reduce travel time and costs. I'd fly to a nearby Canadian city and drive across, into Minnesota or New York. Keeping travel simple and efficient makes the numbers work much better.

If travel truly isn't an option, tax liens are often more manageable remotely than deeds, since you're not immediately taking possession of the property. But if your strategy is focused purely on tax deeds, plan at least one initial trip to understand the process firsthand. It will sharpen your judgment more than any website ever could.

What's the best strategy to do tax liens from Canada without traveling to the U.S.?

If you want to invest from Canada without crossing the border, focus on states that run online tax lien auctions. That's step one. Many counties now conduct their sales through platforms like RealAuction, Grant Street Group, or other approved auction providers.

From there, keep it simple:

- Pick two or three lien states that consistently offer online sales (Florida is a common starting point).
- Go directly to the county websites (don't rely on third-party summaries alone).
- Call the tax collector's office and confirm their online process, registration requirements, and payment deadlines.
- Review past sale results to understand how competitive bidding gets.

The real edge isn't where you're based geographically, it's your preparation. Online sales do make access easier, but they don't reduce the need for Due Diligence. You still need to research property type, assessed value, prior liens (where applicable), and a county's redemption rules.

If you're investing remotely, I'd recommend having a structured approach. Choose one state, learn its system thoroughly, track a few auctions before bidding, and then start small. Consistency beats bouncing between five different states, while trying to chase the highest rate.

What do Canadians need to know about bringing money across the border?

If you're planning to attend live auctions in the U.S., one of the smartest early moves is setting up a U.S. bank account. It makes funding deals, wiring money, and meeting payment deadlines much smoother.

A few important clarifications:

- There is no limit on how much money you can legally bring across the border.
- However, amounts over $10,000 USD (or equivalent) must be declared to customs – both when entering and leaving the U.S. or Canada.
- Declaring funds is not illegal or suspicious – it's simply a reporting requirement. Failing to declare can lead to seizure or penalties.

Because of that, many Canadian investors choose to:

1. Open a U.S. bank account during their first trip.
2. Fund it through declared cash, wire transfers, or cross-border banking services.
3. Use wire transfers or electronic transfers for future auctions instead of carrying large amounts of cash.

This keeps everything clean, documented, and far less stressful.

Before opening an account, confirm the bank's requirements. Most U.S. banks require:

- In-person verification
- Government-issued ID (passport)
- Sometimes a U.S. mailing address (though some banks accommodate Canadians)

An important note: auction payments often require certified funds, ACH transfers, or wire transfers (not personal checks), so having a U.S. account makes compliance much easier.

As a potential buyer from outside the U.S., do I need a tax ID number?

In many cases, the answer would be yes, as it's wise to have one.

You can purchase property in many counties without a U.S. Tax ID. However, when you sell, things can get more complicated. If you sell through a real estate agent or closing attorney, U.S. tax law (FIRPTA) often requires a portion of the sale proceeds (commonly around 10–15%) to be withheld for potential taxes. That money isn't automatically "lost," but it may be held back until you file the proper paperwork.

If you plan to invest more than once, obtaining an ITIN (Individual Taxpayer Identification Number) or using an EIN through a U.S. entity can often simplify the process. It makes closings smoother, helps avoid unnecessary withholding, and keeps your records clean from the start.

Opening a U.S. bank account can also make transactions easier, but getting a tax ID involves filing the proper IRS forms, rather than simply depositing money. If you're investing from abroad and plan to scale your business, it's worth speaking with a cross-border accountant to set things up properly from day one.

Is it possible to sell a tax deed property without title insurance or a warranty deed? What problems can that cause?

Yes, you can sell a tax deed property without title insurance, but it will usually limit your buyer pool.

Most tax deed sales issue a tax deed or quitclaim deed, not a warranty deed. That means you're not guaranteeing clear title, and because of that, traditional buyers (especially those needing a mortgage) often won't move forward unless the title is cleared and insurable. Lenders will require clean, marketable title before they'll fund a loan.

There are generally two paths when selling a tax deed:

1. Sell to a cash investor – experienced investors understand tax deeds. They may buy at a discount and handle the title cleanup themselves. This can be fast, but usually means accepting a lower price.
2. Clear the title first – many investors choose to pursue a quiet title action or work with a tax-title service provider to obtain marketable title. Costs vary by state and complexity, but budgeting for this upfront is smart if you plan to sell to retail buyers. Once title is clear and insurable, you can sell at full market value and open the door to financed buyers.

The key is to know your exit strategy before you buy anything. If your plan is a quick investor flip, you may not need title work immediately. However if your plan is to sell to a homeowner using financing, then clearing title is usually part of the process.

What due diligence should I do when buying over-the-counter tax deeds?

Over-the-counter (OTC) deeds can be great opportunities, but they still require the same discipline as auction purchases.

Many OTC properties are in smaller counties where not everything is sold at the auction. A good first step is calling the county to ask the following questions:

- When was the last sale?
- How many properties didn't sell?
- What is currently available?
- What is included in the purchase (taxes, fees, deed type)?

From there, your due diligence should include:

- Confirm status with the county. Make sure the property is still available, that taxes are current through the sale date, and clarify whether any additional taxes or municipal liens survive the sale.
- Verify the property details. Double-check parcel number, legal description, property type (land vs. structure), zoning, acreage, and access.
- Look at the property. Ideally in person. At minimum, use GIS maps, street view, and local contacts. OTC properties are often leftovers for a reason.

- Check title issues. Research judgments, IRS liens, code violations, HOA liens, or other encumbrances that may not be wiped out by the sale (this varies by state).
- Evaluate value realistically. Pull comparable sales, not just listings. Make sure your purchase price leaves room for resale, holding costs, and possible title work.

Calling the county and confirming “free and clear” is helpful, but remember that county staff cannot give legal guarantees. It’s still your responsibility to verify what survives the sale under state law.

I have $100K to invest – where should I buy tax liens, and in which counties?

Firstly, $100,000 is a fantastic starting point, particularly because it gives you a lot of flexibility. With that amount, most experienced investors would focus on high volume in strong lien states, rather than chasing one or two big certificates. The idea behind this strategy is to spread risk across many properties rather than betting heavily on a few.

For example:

If you purchased 100 tax liens at $1,000 each in a solid redemption state, most would likely redeem and pay you interest, but a small percentage might move toward foreclosure. With this strategy, you generate steady interest income first, with the occasional foreclosure as a bonus.

If you’re building a $100K lien portfolio, look at states with:

- High lien volume
- Clear statutory structure
- Strong redemption history
- Established online platforms

Examples include:

- Arizona – large metro counties like Maricopa offer high volume and a clear 3-year structure.
- Florida – very competitive but highly organized online system; strong redemption history.
- Colorado – statutory interest (9% over prime) and defined rules.
- Iowa – known for competitive bidding but structured process.
- Maryland – high interest caps, strong online participation in larger counties.

The bigger metro counties (Maricopa AZ, Miami-Dade FL, Denver CO, Baltimore MD, etc.) tend to have the most consistent volume and structured online systems.

With $100K, your focus should be:

- Diversification (don't concentrate everything in one lien)
- Clear bidding disciplines
- Conservative return expectations
- Understanding each state's foreclosure timeline
- Having systems in place to track redemptions and deadlines

Remember that at this kind of scale, organization becomes critical. Whether that's managing software, spreadsheets, or team support, you'll want structure so you're not juggling 75–150 certificates manually.

How can you optimize your return on investment?

It's true that higher interest rates and shorter redemption periods can improve returns, but that's only part of the equation. Certain states advertise attractive numbers, like Iowa, which has a high statutory rate. Other states offer shorter redemption timelines. On paper, both of these can look like clear winners, but the highest rate doesn't always mean the best return, because competitive bidding, premiums, legal costs, and foreclosure timelines all affect what you actually earn.

Optimizing ROI really comes down to three things:

1. Buying at the right price – Discipline at auction matters more than chasing the highest advertised rate.
2. Capital efficiency – Don't let all your money sit idle in long redemption states unless that fits your strategy. Some investors mix shorter and longer timelines to keep money cycling.
3. Strong exit strategy – Whether you're collecting interest or positioning for a deed, know your plan before you bid.

If your goal is maximizing yield, focus on:

- States with consistent redemption history
- Clear statutory structure
- Manageable foreclosure timelines
- Online access so you can participate consistently

And remember, the deed should be viewed as potential upside, not the primary plan. Most experienced tax lien investors build their returns on interest income first, with occasional foreclosures as a bonus.

If I join the Total Freedom Business (TFB) Program, what can I expect?

The TFB is a program that goes far beyond the fundamentals covered in this book. Instead of just explaining what tax liens and deeds are, we walk you step-by-step through how to actually execute strategies that are tailored to your budget, goals, and location. The course includes a complete breakdown of tax lien and tax deed strategies, over-the-counter purchases, GIS mapping, title research, bidding strategies, how to filter county lists, exit planning strategies, and building systems that ensure you're not starting from scratch every time. It's structured to help you move from a grounded understanding of the fundamentals to an informed, systematic investor approach.

You can also expect support from our whole team on a regular basis. We provide ongoing online coaching, regular live webinars, and interactive Q&A sessions where you can ask questions in real time. Students submit their research, share testimonies, and receive feedback before they place any bids. We also offer 1-on-1 calls that give students clarity and professional advice, ensuring they invest wisely and can avoid unnecessary mistakes.

Most importantly, the TFB is designed to shorten the learning curve, and propel you into the field. Instead of piecing together scattered information from a variety of sources, you're learning from investors who have been in the field for nearly two decades, including transparency into the mistakes, the refinements, and the systems that actually work. It's hands-on, practical, and built for people who want to move from theory into consistent action.

Section 8: Glossary of Terms

Glossary of Terms for Tax Lien and Tax Deed Investing

Accelerated Sale: A tax lien sale where the county sells the current year's unpaid property taxes instead of waiting until the following year. In this type of sale, there are no prior-year delinquent taxes attached to the lien, as you're purchasing only the current year's obligation.

Affadavit: A written statement that is sworn to be true, usually signed in front of a notary. In the tax lien process, affidavits are often required when you're claiming reimbursable expenses, such as recording fees, title search costs, foreclosure fees, or subsequent taxes you've paid. Filing the proper affidavit ensures you're eligible to collect interest on those additional amounts and that you're repaid correctly if the lien redeems.

Assignment: The transfer of a tax lien certificate or tax deed from one investor (or entity) to another. For the transfer to be legally recognized, it must be recorded with the county, and there is usually a recording fee involved.

If the assignment is not properly recorded, the county will still recognize the original holder as the owner. That means if the lien redeems, payment will be sent to the original holder (not the new buyer). Recording the assignment protects your position and ensures you receive any redemption funds.

Bankruptcy: A legal process that allows an individual or business to restructure or eliminate debts under court supervision. There are different types of bankruptcy, but once a filing occurs, the court typically appoints a trustee to oversee the debtor's assets and creditor claims.

When bankruptcy is filed, an automatic "stay" goes into effect. This temporarily freezes collection actions, including foreclosure. If you hold a tax lien on the property, you may need to file a claim with the bankruptcy court to protect your interest. You cannot move forward with foreclosure until the stay is lifted or the court grants permission.

Bidder Information Sheet: A form required by certain counties (most commonly in New Jersey) that collects your identifying information before or after a tax sale. It typically includes your name, address, and Social Security Number or Federal EIN (if bidding through an entity).

Some counties require this form, along with a W-9, before you're allowed to bid. Others only request it if you win a lien. In many states, this process is handled through a broader Bidder Registration Form completed prior to the auction.

Bidder Registration Form: A form required by many counties before you're allowed to participate in a tax sale. Registration can take place online or in person, depending on the state and whether the auction is live or online.

The form typically includes your name, address, phone number, and either your Social Security Number or EIN if you're bidding through a company. You may also be assigned a bidder number and asked to sign an acknowledgment of the auction rules and sale conditions. Without completing this step (and any required deposit), you won't be eligible to place bids.

Bring down: An update to a title search that checks for any new liens, judgments, or recorded documents filed after the original search was completed.

In other words, it "brings down" the title work to the current date to make sure nothing has changed. This is especially important before foreclosing on a tax lien or closing on a resale, so you're not caught off guard by a newly recorded issue.

Clean Title: Title to a property that is free from liens, claims, or other legal encumbrances. A clean (or clear) title means there are no outstanding ownership disputes or debts attached to the property. When you purchase at a tax deed sale, you typically do not receive clean title right away. Most tax deed properties are conveyed by a quitclaim deed or tax deed without warranty, meaning there are no guarantees about prior claims.

To obtain clean, marketable title (especially if you plan to sell to a retail buyer or use traditional financing), you may need to file a quiet title action, which is a legal process that clears up any potential ownership issues.

Face value: The total amount owed to the lien holder if the tax lien is redeemed.

This includes the original lien amount (the taxes you paid), any accrued interest, any subsequent taxes you paid, interest on those subsequent payments, and any allowable fees. Considering that interest continues to accrue over time, the face value will change depending on when the property owner redeems the lien.

Foreclosure: The legal process used to take ownership of a property when a debt hasn't been paid. In the tax lien and deed world, foreclosure is how a lien holder moves from holding a certificate to potentially owning the property (if the taxes aren't redeemed within the allowed time). Some states require formal court action to foreclose, while others use an administrative process through the county.

Lien: A legal claim placed against a property to secure payment of a debt.

If the debt isn't paid, the lien gives the creditor the right to take further legal action, such as foreclosure, to recover what's owed. In tax lien investing, the lien represents unpaid property taxes and is secured by the real estate itself.

Lien holder: The individual or entity whose name is officially recorded on a lien against a property. In tax lien investing, the lien holder is the investor who purchased the tax lien certificate. This person (or company) has the legal right to collect the taxes owed (plus interest and allowable fees) or to move toward foreclosure if the lien is not redeemed within the allowed time.

Open Taxes: Property taxes that are currently unpaid at the time of a tax sale.

In most tax lien sales, the lien being sold covers prior-year taxes. That means there may also be current unpaid taxes (called "subsequent" or open taxes) that come due after you purchase the certificate. In many states, once you hold the lien, you have the option to pay these later taxes as well, adding them to your position and earning interest on those amounts too. In some areas, this can also apply to related charges such as sewer liens that have outstanding property taxes attached.

Over the Counter (OTC): Liens or deeds that did not sell at the public tax sale and are later made available directly through the county.

Instead of bidding at auction, you purchase these by private request, often at a set price. In lien states, OTC certificates are typically sold at the maximum statutory interest rate. In deed states, leftover properties may sometimes be available for the amount of back taxes owed, and in certain cases, even less. OTC opportunities can be attractive because there's no bidding competition, but they still require the same level of due diligence as auction purchases.

Premium: An amount paid above the lien amount in order to win a tax lien or tax deed at auction.

In some states, once bidders have pushed the interest rate down to its minimum, competition continues through bidding a premium (sometimes called an "overbid"). How that premium is treated depends entirely on the state:

- In New Jersey, the premium is returned to the investor if the lien redeems within 5 years. If it does not redeem within that period, the premium is forfeited.
- In some states, the premium is returned (with interest or penalties) when the lien or deed redeems.
- In other states, the premium is not returned at all, even if the lien redeems.

The term "premium" can also refer to an amount paid above face value when purchasing a lien from another investor through an assignment.

Prior lien holder: A person or entity that holds a previously issued tax lien on a property.

Realty Transfer Fee: A fee charged by a county or state when real estate changes ownership and a deed is recorded. In some states, this fee is paid when you file your deed with the county clerk after purchasing a property (including at a tax deed sale).

Recording or Filing Fee: A fee charged by the County Clerk to officially record a lien or deed in the public records. When a tax lien certificate or deed is recorded, it is assigned a book and page number (or instrument number) so it can be located in the county's records. In many lien states, this recording fee is reimbursed to the investor when the lien is redeemed, provided the proper paperwork (such as an affidavit) has been filed with the tax collector.

Redeemable Deed: A tax deed that comes with a redemption period attached. In these states, the former owner has a set amount of time to reclaim the property by paying you the purchase price plus a statutory penalty (and sometimes additional costs). If the owner redeems within that period, you receive your investment back along with the penalty. If they do not redeem before the deadline, the deed becomes fully yours, subject to that state's foreclosure or confirmation process.

Redemption: Redemption happens when the property owner pays off the delinquent taxes and clears the tax lien. In a tax lien state, the owner pays the tax collector the amount of the lien plus any approved subsequent taxes, interest, and penalties. The county then pays the lien holder. In some states, the investor must return the original certificate (or follow the county's claim process) to receive payment.

In states with redeemable tax deeds, redemption works similarly. The former owner can reclaim the property during the redemption period by paying the deed amount plus the required penalty and interest. If they redeem, you receive your funds back according to state law.

Redemption Penalty:

A fixed percentage paid to the investor when a lien or redeemable deed is redeemed. Unlike interest, a penalty is not calculated over time, and instead you receive the full statutory percentage once the property owner redeems.

For example:

- In New Jersey, a redemption penalty is paid in addition to any interest that was bid. The penalty applies only to the certificate amount (not to subsequent taxes). The penalty tiers are:
 - 2% for liens from $200–$4,999.99
 - 4% for liens from $5,000–$9,999.99
 - 6% for liens of $10,000 and above

- In Florida, if bidding drives the interest rate below 5%, the investor instead receives a 5% minimum penalty upon redemption.
- In Texas (a redeemable deed state), the owner must pay a 25% penalty if redeeming within the first six months, and 50% if redeeming in the second six-month period.

Many redeemable deed states use penalties rather than traditional interest rates, so understanding how each state calculates returns is essential before bidding.

Redemption Period: The legally defined amount of time a property owner has to pay off (redeem) a tax lien or redeemable deed.

If a tax lien is not redeemed within that period, the lien holder may move toward foreclosure or apply for a tax deed, depending on the state's process. In redeemable deed states, if the owner does not redeem before the deadline, full ownership transfers to the purchaser, subject to state procedures.

Sewer Lien: A lien placed on a property for unpaid sewer charges or sewer taxes.

In some areas, sewer liens are sold separately from property tax liens. They can sometimes appear more frequently because mortgage companies often escrow and pay property taxes—but sewer charges may remain the homeowner's responsibility. As a result, sewer liens may become delinquent even when property taxes are current.

Special Assessments: Charges placed on a property by a city or municipality for specific improvements or services, such as sidewalks, road paving, utilities, or local infrastructure projects.

In many states, special assessments are not wiped out by a tax sale. That means if you purchase a tax deed, you may still be responsible for paying them. If you hold a tax lien and move toward foreclosure, you may also need to account for these assessments before completing the process.

Subsequent Taxes (“Subs”): Property taxes that come due after you’ve already purchased a tax lien certificate.

In many states, once you hold the lien, you have the right (and often the first option) to pay any later delinquent taxes on that same property. The timing depends on how the state bills taxes. For example, New Jersey collects taxes quarterly, while Florida collects them annually.

Paying subsequent taxes is often smart because you typically earn interest on those amounts as well. It also helps protect your position by preventing the property from going back to the next tax sale, where another investor could step in.

Tax Deed: A tax deed is issued when a property with unpaid taxes is sold outright by the county.

In tax deed states, the government does not sell a lien, it sells ownership of the property itself at auction to recover the delinquent taxes. The winning bidder receives a tax deed to the property.

Tax Lien: A legal claim placed against a property for unpaid property taxes.

When property taxes go unpaid, the local government records a lien against the real estate. In lien states, that lien can be sold to investors in the form of a tax lien certificate. The investor then has the right to collect the unpaid taxes (plus interest and allowable fees), or potentially move toward foreclosure if the debt is not redeemed within the allowed time.

Tax Lien Certificate: This is a certificate of sale for unpaid municipal liens, issued by the tax collector of a county or municipality, verifying payment. The certificate lists the certificate number, name of the tax collector, the taxing district, the date of the sale. Also on the face of the certificate is the buyer’s name and address, a description of the property (in New Jersey, its block, lot and address), the name of the property owner, and the amount of the sale.

The certificate is not valid unless it is signed by the tax collector and notarized. Keep your tax lien certificates in a safe place. You must sign the back of the certificate, have it notarized, and return it to the tax collector before receiving payment upon redemption by the property owner.

Quiet Title (Action): A legal proceeding used to clear up ownership issues and establish clean, marketable title to a property.

Quiet title is often necessary after purchasing a tax deed, since most tax sales convey property without warranty. Through this court process, any potential claims, liens, or ownership disputes are addressed and resolved. Once completed, the property can typically be sold with clear title, and title insurance may become available.

Utility lien: A lien placed on a property for unpaid utility charges, such as sewer, water, or sometimes electricity.

In some municipalities, unpaid utility bills can attach directly to the property rather than just the individual. Depending on state and local law, utility liens may survive a tax sale, so it's important to confirm whether they remain attached before purchasing a lien or deed.

W-9 form: A standard IRS form used to provide your taxpayer identification information to the county after you successfully purchase a tax lien (and sometimes a tax deed).

The form lists your name (or company name) and your Social Security Number or EIN. While this information may also appear on your Bidder Information Sheet, many municipalities require a separate W-9 so they can properly report any interest or penalty income paid to you.

Warranty deed: A deed that transfers property ownership with guarantees that the title is clear. When a property is conveyed by warranty deed, the seller is legally guaranteeing that there are no undisclosed liens, claims, or ownership disputes attached to the property. If a problem later surfaces, the seller may be legally responsible.
